More prestige targets aim of IRA killers

DUBLIN (UPI) — Northern Ireland's outlawed Irish Republican Army warned today it would murder other "prestige targets" like Earl Mountbatten, cousin to the British Queen.

In an interview with the Irish Times, an unnamed IRA spokesman said a 50-pound gelignite bomb detonated by remote control had blown Mountbatten's cabin cruiser to pieces last Monday off the Sligo coast, killing him and three other persons.

"Mountbatten did not represent any change in our legitimate targets," the IRA spokesman said. "Judges, senior government officials, defense personnel were among our targets several months ago.

"We will continue to hit prestige targets and we will hit the next one just as hard."

In a reference to former British Prime Minister James Callaghan and his son-in-law Peter Jay, former British ambassador to Washington, who were holidaying in the Irish republic, the IRA spokesman said, "Wait and see if Jay and Callaghan return to their holiday cottage in Cork next year.

Irish police said the possible "triggermen" who detonated the bomb that killed Mountbatten may have fled to England and are hiding in the Irish community there.

In Northern Ireland, security forces said they expected arrests shortly in the IRA ambush that killed 18 British soldiers in the border town of Warrenpoint on Monday shortly after Mountbatten was killed in the explosion of his yacht.

But as the hunt for suspects went on late Friday, bombers went into action again. A group of armed men burst into the Cliftonville Golf Club on the outskirts of Belfast, Northern Ireland, and planted two packages. Police said the building was evacuated before the parcels exploded minutes later, causing some damage but no injuries.

In London today, The Sun, Britain's leading tabloid daily, says three leading U.S. politicians must share part of the blame for the situation which led to the murder of Earl Mountbatten of Burma in the Irish Republic.

Describing them as the Gang of Three, The Sun bitterly condemns the activities of Senator Edward Kennedy (Dem. Mass.), New York Gov. Hugh Carey and Thomas (Tip) O'Neill, Speaker in the House of Representatives.

In a two-page editorial, The Sun maintained Friday these three showed sympathy for the Irish Republican Army which claimed the assassination of Mountbatten, his grandson and his daughter's mother-in-law.

In Ottawa, Prime Minister Clark announced that a 12-member official delegation, led by former Governor-General Roland Michener, will represent Canada at the Mountbatten's funeral.

Ferries seeks injunction after wildcat

The B.C. Ferry Corporation moved today to seek an injunction to prevent wildcat strike action by ferry union members following a short-lived disruption of service at Langdale this morning.

The 6:30 a.m. sailing of the Queen of New Westminster out of Langdale for Horseshoe Bay was cancelled when members of the B.C. Ferry and Marine Workers Union set up a picket line.

While union spokesman Matt Brown said the picket was only an information picket set up to protest slow progress in contract negotiations, ferry workers refused to cross the line. The pickets were removed by 9 a.m.

The action was taken despite the union leadership's assurance that its members would stay on the job at least over the holiday weekend.

There were fears other workers might also take independent strike action suit but as of noon today, all terminals were operating normally.

Union president Shirley Mathieson described the unsanctioned job action as "pretty restless."

If it continued it could create chaos for the travelling public, many of whom went ahead with ferry trips because of the union's pledge there would be no strike action.

The ferry workers served strike notice 11 days ago but the union cannot legally strike until mediator Fred Geddes bows out of the dispute.

Talks between the corporation and union broke down Friday. A 90-minute meeting with Geddes failed to resolve several major issues.

Labor Minister Allan Williams has called the leaders of both sides to a meeting in his office Tuesday.

Negotiations and mediation have gone on for more than four months with wages, sick leave and the use of casual labor as the main issues still to be resolved.

The last contract expired July 31.

Pioneer survives plunge

MOUNTAIN VIEW, Calif. (UPI) — Pioneer 11, surviving its first moment of peril, dove under the main rings of Saturn today to become history's first spacecraft to visit the planet.

On its flight inbound to Saturn, Pioneer shot through "Ring E," an area of unknown flying objects, in a fraction of a second at 9:04 a.m. PDT. Then it swept toward its point of closest approach, 13,300 miles from Saturn's cloud tops, at a top speed of 70,900 mph.

The feat culminated a 77-month journey of more than 2 billion miles. Saturn, the second largest planet in the solar system, is the sixth out from the sun and the farthest from earth to be explored.

In Ring E the danger to the 565-pound spacecraft was the possibility of collision. At its high speed, the spacecraft could explode if it hit an object as small as a fleck of dust. Ring E, discovered only recently, is believed to contain flying chunks of ice.

Air fares hike set for U.S.

DALLAS (UPI) — The Civil Aeronautics Board Friday authorized all U.S. airlines to increase fares 9.5 percent due to soaring fuel costs.

Although no formal order was issued immediately, it was expected to be made official Tuesday, officials said.

Officials of Braniff and American airlines, both based in Dallas, said they would boost ticket prices as soon as possible.

"We're very pleased the CAB gave us the 9.5 percent, even though that makes a total of about a 20 percent (total ticket) increase so far this year," said John Raymond, a spokesman for American Airlines. "But our fuel costs are up about 50 percent since the first of the year."

NO DAMAGE estimate was yet available today after spectacular riverside blaze in New Westminster Friday. The creosote-soaked timbers and pilings and asphalt surface of Pacific Coast Terminals burned with a vengeance when torched by an explosion aboard a log-salvaging boat. Here fire boats battle the inferno which created massive clouds of thick, black smoke. See story on page 16.

Fall bill to ease pot penalties

HAMILTON (CP) — The federal government will propose reduced penalties this fall for simple possession of marijuana, says federal Health Minister David Crombie.

But he said in an interview he wants a debate in Parliament in November on marijuana, and he wants the debate to make the public more aware of the harmful effectsof its use.

The first part of the package "is going to deal with the simple problem of how to deal with diminishing the penalties for simple possession, dealing with the problem of criminal records and so on," he said.

The second part will deal with the effects of marijuana: "We made some easy assumptions about the effects of cannabis," he said. However, "if society continues to be as permissive as we have been in light of the information now available, I think we would be over-permissive."

Crombie said reducing penalties for simple possession is a complicated procedure.

"Some people have said 'decriminalize.' If the federal government decriminalizes cannabis 100 per cent then it doesn't have anything more to say about it. It then becomes a provincial responsibility.

"I'm interested in discouraging its use, to put it in short."

Foreign envoys fleeing Uganda

By DAVID LAMB
Los Angeles Times

NAIROBI, Kenya — With Uganda in a state of near anarchy, foreign diplomats and aid workers have begun leaving Kampala after the government's failure to meet an ultimatum for increased security.

The entire staff of the Egyptian embassy in Kampala has arrived in Nairobi over the past few days and will leave for Cairo next week unless the Ugandan government agrees to put armed guards at diplomats' residences and wage war on the uniformed thugs jamming the capital.

Earlier this week, Britain and West Germany ordered reductions in the size of their Ugandan diplomatic missions and two American families at the seven-member U.S. embassy will leave Kampala this weekend. The State Department also is considering the evacuation of "non-essential" Americans at the embassy, such as secretaries and aid representatives, sources said.

The United Nations maintains that its program in Uganda has not been affected despite the killing of a U.N. employee last Sunday. But U.N. sources in Nairobi said that about 12 U.N. agency employees, most of its staff in Uganda, arrived here Wednesday from Kampala.

Because of the lack of security, Western countries are re-evaluating their role in Uganda and considering the suspension of aid as a last resort if lawlessness makes it impossible to administer aid programs properly. Deprived of the financial resources it needs so desperately, the government of Uganda's moderate, pro-Western president, Godfrey Minaisa, would be in great difficulty.

"Foreign countries must give us a chance," Binaisa said Wednesday in appealing to the international community not to cut off aid.

"I know we are experiencing teething problems and I

Gov't resource policy rapped

By CHARLES LA VERTU

VANCOUVER (CP) — A leakage of resource revenue during the past four years has cost British Columbia about 4,200 jobs and $85 million in production, says a report outlining a proposed economic strategy for the New Democratic Party.

The report, which is to be considered Sunday during the provincial NDP's annual three-day convention currently under way here, accuses the Social Credit government of having no long-term industrial strategy and of ignoring major government studies which recommend ways to strenghten B.C.'s industrial base, particularly in mining and forestry processing.

"For example, one of these studies estimated that with proper policies, up to 1,000 extra jobs could be generated in B.C.'s coal mining industry," the report say. "But the Socreds have failed to implement these recommendations and there has been only a negligible gain in employment in the coal industry."

It says the "Socreds failure to collect a fair price for B.C. resources costs the economy dearly."

As a result, B.C. taxpayers have provided Kaiser Resources Ltd., the province's largest coal producer, with a subsidy of between $40 million and $50 million — 85 per cent of which was used to pay higher dividends to foreign shareholders and to fi-

Killer winds heading for Florida

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic (UPI) — Hurricane David smashed through Hispaniola, leaving Santo Domingo a twisted wreck today, then burst into the Atlantic on a course that threatened eastern Cuba, the Bahamas and south Florida.

Hurricane warnings were posted for the southern and central Bahamas with hurricane conditions expected to spread across eastern Cuba later today. The National Hurricane Centre in Miami warned residents of the northern Bahamas and south Florida to "keep in touch with future advisories."

An exact count was difficult to determine, but at least 25 people were confirmed dead and thousands were injured from the storm's passage through the Caribbean this week.

In Miami, weather forecaster Miles Lawrence said if David "maintains its present course, it would head for south Florida. I would hate to pinpoint a city but it would be somewhere between Palm Beach and Key West."

At 9 a.m. EDT, the hurricane centre said David, weakened by mountains in Hispaniola during the night, was reorganizing over the narrow water passage between Haiti and Cuba.

David was centred near latitude 19.5 north, longitude 74.0 west, midway between the northwest tip of Haiti and the eastern tip of Cuba. It was expected to move towards the west northwest around 15 mph for the next 24 hours. The threat to Florida depended on how much strength David regained.

Rain still fell on Santo Domingo in the Dominican Republic today, a city of 1,000,000 people. But civil defense workers had yet to determine the number of dead and homeless from the storm.

Most of the city's poor neighborhoods where residents live in flimsy shacks were wiped out, officials said. Roads were strewn with trees and the downtown area was littered with rubble.

The full brunt of the killer storm was felt Friday afternoon, with local weather officials putting the highest gusts at 90 mph. Windows were punched out on most buildings, but solid structures remained standing.

Workmen tried to restore electricity today and clear the road to the airport, blocked by fallen trees.

Montreal heading for robbery record

MONTREAL (CP) — Already dubbed the "armed robbery capital of the world", Montreal appears headed for a record year in bank robberies.

Nearly 600 city banks and financial institutions have been held up this year — several more than in New York, which has almost twice as many banks.

"There's no miracle solution," Det.-Capt. Henri Marchessault of the Montreal police department said in an interview this week.

Marchessault believes the answer may lie with the banks themselves, for police have been unable to stem the rising tide of robberies.

"What disappoints me," he said, "is that the banks don't improve their security systems because they're afraid of how their customers will react.

"However, if all financial institutions got together to adopt efficient methods of protection there would be fewer thefts and the customers would be better served."

Marchessault added that judges are "not too severe" with armed robbers in Quebec.

A police study shows that, since the start of the year in Montreal, the average sentence for adults convicted of a first armed robbery offence was two years, while second offenders got an average 42 months.

Police also note that more than a third of arrests for holdups are of youths under 18, and many of them have committed more than one offence.

Although many provinces send offenders over 16 to adult courts, Quebec's juvenile courts deal with all offenders under 18.

"Some young people arrested admit to our investigators that they aren't running any risk at all in committing holdups before they're 18."

Marcel Cholette, the police department's director of special investigations, said drug addiction is behind much of Montreal's youthful crime.

"No one has been able to come up with exact figures," he said, "but it wouldn't be exaggerating to say that 50 per cent of young people who commit crimes do so to obtain expensive drugs."

Air crash lawsuits launched

VANCOUVER (CP) — Seven British Columbia Supreme Court damage actions were filed Friday arising from deaths in the crash of an AirWest Twin Otter last year.

The float plane crashed in Vancouver's Coal Harbor Sept. 2, 1978, at the end of a regularly-scheduled flight from Victoria. Eleven of the 13 persons on board were killed, including the pilot and copilot, and nine Japanese tourists.

Witnesses said the plane came in low over the trees of Stanley Park, veered sharply to the left and plunged nose first into the water between two rows of boats at a yacht club.

A coroner's inquest was told Sept. 8 that the deaths were caused either by drowning or injuries suffered in the accident. After identification, the inquest was adjourned indefinitely.

U.S. tuna embargo threat brushed off as 'gesture'

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Canadian officials today unofficially brushed aside threats from the United States to embargo Canadian tuna imports after fishery officials seized 19 boats for fishing illegally in Canadian waters last week.

"Really, this last threat from Washington late yesterday is only a token gesture from the State Department. Our total exports of tuna in 1978 to the U.S. was only $130,000," the official said.

"Canada isn't even in the tuna business because $130,000 isn't enough business to keep a corner store going."

The State Department gave a note to Canadian Ambassador Peter Towe late Friday, pointing out that the U.S. does not agree with Canada's claim to jurisdiction over U.S. vessels fishing for the highy migratory albacore tuna.

It warned that Treasury Secretary William Miller has been asked to block Canadian tuna exports to the United States.

"I don't think anything has been done yet. This is only a threat, said the fisheries official.

Fisheries Minister James McGrath could not be reached for comment, but, earlier this week he promised he will "bring the full weight of the law" against all U.S. boats illegally fishing in Canadian waters.

The Tuna War fracas continued to escalate late Friday when federal officials seized and ordered one more U.S. tuna boat into Vancouver harbor after it was spotted inside the 200-mile limit off the British Columbia coast.

Two vessels seized earlier this week, The Proud Mary from San Diego and the Santa Innes from Washington State, are due to arrive in Vancouver port later today and fishery inspectors will examine the boats to see if charges can be laid.

Officials had to make a last minute change Friday and re-route the growing number of vessels to the larger port of Vancouver, when it was discovered the Victoria harbor wasn't large enough handle 10 vessels.

It is still difficult to estimate how long the Tuna War will continue because the U.S. fishermen follow the Albacore tuna, a highly migratory species.

"I would say it is almost over, because, I have been told the American companies have told captains to get themselves out of the area," said a fisheries official.

It is highly unusual for the albacore to migrate as far north as the Canadian border.

Meanwhile, the week-long hunt for American tuna boats fishing in Canadian waters has been called off following the seizure by fisheries officers of the 19th vessel.

The latest arrest came near the southern end of Queen Charlotte Islands early Friday.

"We feel we've got them all now," said Charles Friend, press officer for federal Fisheries Minister James McGrath in an interview from Ottawa this morning.

U.S. officials have indicated the Canadian action may have far-reaching consequences.

John Breaux, chairman of a congessional fisheries committee warned Friday the seizure of the boats might jeopardize prospects for ratification of new East Coast fishing treaties with Canada.

He said the decision to first seize boats last Sunday came without adequate warning to the U.S. and other seizures later in the week have not helped resolve the dispute.

But Friend discounted the threat.

He said the only unusual aspect to the seizure of the boats is the number involved.

Lt.-Comdr. Dick Pepper, Canadian Armed Forces spokesman in Victoria, said today the destroyer McKenzie, which was assisting fisheries patrol officers in locating the tuna boats, has now left the area and was on its way back.

Friend said the Americans are aware of Canada's 200-mile limit and know Canada claims jurisdication.

The claim, he added, is recognized by all nations in the world except the U.S. and Japan which feel they have rights to fish migratory species outside a 12-mile limit.

Friend said the U.S. and Japanese attitude is analogous to a motorist getting ticketted for turning right on a red light in Quebec and then trying to defend his actions by saying he's from Ontario where it is permissable to make such a turn.

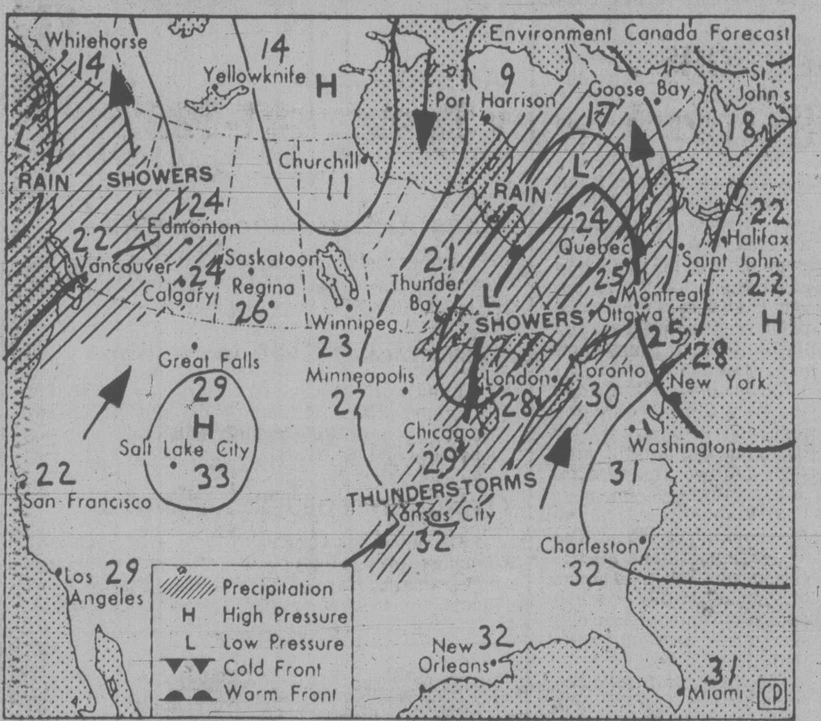
The Weather



Map valid until noon Sunday

A major low pressure centre has become established off the B.C. coast. Bands of cloud rotating around the low will result in a weekend of unsettled and showery weather for the province. Generally, precipitation will be more frequent on the outer coasts with most interior areas experiencing only a few showers and considerable sunshine. However, even coastal locations should see at least a little sunshine between cloud bands. This general pattern is expected to last well into the coming week.

ENVIRONMENT CANADA WEATHER OFFICE 10 A.M. FORECASTS

Valid Until Midnight Sunday

Greater Victoria: mainly cloudy. Occasional showers. Sunday cloudy with sunny periods. Isolated showers. Highs both days 20 to 22. Lows overnight 12 to 14.

Greater Vancouver, East Vancouver Island: mainly cloudy, occasional showers. Sunday cloudy with sunny periods. Isolated showers. Highs both days 20 to 22. Lows overnight near 14.

North and West Vancouver Island: cloudy with showers at times increasing to steady rain through sunday. Brisk winds at times along the coast. Highs both days 15 to 18. Lows overnight around 13.

Luci Nugent gets divorce

The 13-year marriage of Luci Nugent, daughter of the late President Lyndon Johnson, ended Friday when she was granted a divorce Friday from Patrick Nugent. State District Judge Hume Cofer signed the divorce decree after lawyers agreed on a property settlement, which was not disclosed. The couple has four children. Mrs. Nugent filed for the divorce in January under Texas's no-fault divorce law that cites no grounds other than that the marriage had become "insupportable" because of discord.

Zimbabwe-Rhodesia's 55-year-old transport and power minister, Pieter van der Byl, and 26-year-old Princess Charlotte von Liechtenstein were married Friday in a glittering ceremony at Waldenstein Castle. The 200 guests included Otto Hapsburg, son of the last Austrian emperor; Prince Franz Josef II of Liechtenstein and his wife, Princess Tina and a number of British politicians, including former Conservative cabinet minister Julian Amery. Princess Charlotte is the daughter of Prince Heinrich Karl von Liechtenstein and Archduchess Elisabeth, the youngest sister of Otto Hapsburg. Heinrich Karl is a cousin of Prince Franz Josef, the ruler of the tiny principality tucked away between Switzerland and Austria.

Dr. Jack Wheeler, who's trying to take an elephant across the Alps, says he's trying to match Hannibal's historic feat. Not so, says Robert Arbogast, of Central Point, Ore. He says if Wheeler makes it he'll only be matching legendary explorer Richard Halliburton who did the deed in July, 1935. Arbogast, an avid Halliburton fan, even remembers the elephant's name — says it was Elysabethe Dalrymple.

Ex-drug guru Timothy Leary says the screaming at his home that prompted a neighbor to call police was caused by he and his wife "making loud love," not fighting. "We never fight," Leary told reporters "We were making love at the time. Neither of us had clothes on at the time, and for that I apologize."

Leary also denied they, arrested on drug charges and scheduled for arraignment Sept. 21 in Beverly Hills Municipal Court, were high on any illegal drugs or were keeping any cocaine in their apartment.

Despite that problem, Leary had kind words for the officers who arrested them.

"The police were gentlemen," he said. "It was a new situation for them. Their motives were good."

"The Beverly Hills jail is the nicest little jail of all the 30 I've been in," he said.

Johnny Cash's Boy Named Sue never had such headaches. His road show is eroding. First Jan Howard quit, and now Helen and Anita Carter, who, with Jan, comprise The Carter Sisters, have departed. That leaves only Big John, wife June Carter and the Tennessee Three Band. Cash's Los Angeles agent says Jan wants a solo career while Helen and Anita are out to put together an act with the younger generation of the Cashes.

American singer Ethel Merman fell and injured her nose and right knee during a television variety show taping in Toronto Friday night. But the 69-year-old star bounced right back, a spokesman at St. Joseph's Hospital said. She was treated and released within an hour of arriving by ambulance. Miss Merman was doing a comedy routine with Marty Allen when she stumbled.

And finally, Les Johnson is better known to Salt Lake City residents as Bananas the Clown — and that's the name he wants to appear on the city council ballot this fall. The Salt Lake City attorney's office doesn't think the idea is so funny. But Bananas, who has been in the entertainment business for 11 years, says he will fight to have his clown name on the ballot.

Surfboard Baron crosses icy Strait

WALES, Alaska (UPI) — Clinging to a 3-metre surfboard rigged with a sail made from replicas of American and Soviet flags, French Baron Arnaud de Rosnay crossed the 100-kilometre wide Bering Strait in the latest of his madcap adventures, it was reported Friday.

Wearing a black wet suit and waving, de Rosnay was met at the international boundary by a Russian destroyer which escorted him to the Siberian coastal village of Naukan.

Sources in Paris reported that the Russian government promptly flew de Rosnay to Moscow, where his sponsor, Paris Match magazine, was attempting to arrange his return to France.

"We had an agreement that when he made the coast he would fire three flares," said Andy Klamser, an Alaskan photographer hired to record the adventure on film. "At 10:04 p.m., Bering Strait time, we saw three red flares from the village."

The baron had pushed off from the shores of Alaska in 45-degree weather while school children sang, For He's a Jolly Good fellow.

Last year, de Rosnay made a crossing of the Sahara Desert on a surfboard rigged with sails and wheels.

Botha gets cheers in Soweto

SOWETO, South Africa (AP) — Prime Minister Pieter Botha, in a shift from South Africa's rigid racial policies, visited the black township of Soweto Friday and declared: "We are all South Africans."

It was the first visit ever to this sprawling black ghetto by a prime minister of the white-minority government. He told a crowd of several thousand blacks: "Soweto deserves the status and title of a city and has just claim to the resources of this nation."

His visit and speech is certain to infuriate right-wingers and other conservatives. During a parliamentary byelection this week, they called Botha's National party "kaffirboeties" — black lovers. Botha's candidate won the election.

Botha's statement and his recognition of Soweto as a city goes against his own party's position. It is generally held that the blacks belong to their rural homelands and are permitted to live in settlements near white urban centres only when their labor is needed.

Soweto, located on the outskirts of Johannesburg, has a population of more than one million blacks, making it the country's largest city.

Botha was cheered by the blacks at the council building and David Skosana, a truck driver, told reporters: "He's too good a man. The Afrikaners (ruling whites of Dutch descent) will not keep him."

But Nthatho Motlana, who is considered the representative of Soweto's militants, refused to meet the prime minister.

Riots broke out in Soweto in 1976 over the government's attempt to require the teaching of the Dutch-based Afrikaans language in all schools. Violence spread throughout the country, with more than 700 blacks killed and the government removed the language requirement.

In his speech, Botha promised to consult with Soweto leaders and officials of 170 other recently established community councils in black townships before making decisions that affect them.

Sextuplets survival 'unlikely'

ATHENS (Reuter) — A 21-year-old Greek woman gave birth to sextuplets today but doctors said the four girls and two boys were very weak and not expected to live.

The doctors at an Athens hospital said Lambrini Tika from Volos, Greece, had the six babies prematurely.

The woman had not taken any fertilty drugs, doctors said.

Months of terror end as bat invasion wanes

PITTSBURGH (AP) — In the last month, Tom Smith has killed 360 bats as they flew each night from the attic of his century-old home. But now a roof and the workings of Mother Nature should put an end to four months of terror for the suburban Pittsburgh family plagued by the winged creatures.

"We're waiting for them to start leaving to hibernate," Smith's wife, Pat, said Friday. "When we're sure there are no more left, we're going to put a new roof on and begin from there."

About 25 of the mammals remain, she said.

Hundreds of bats occupied the attic of the Smith's white frame house, whose roof is not well-sealed. Experts say the winged creatures entered through the chinks and bred there every spring, apparently for the last 50 years.

Although the bats tested by health authorities were not rabid, the family lived in constant fear.

The Smiths estimate they killed an average of 20 a night as the creatures began their nocturnal hunt for food. The bats terrified the couple's two small children by banging against the outer walls and trying to crawl through windows on their return.

"We hope it will be over soon," said Mrs. Smith.

Smith, owner of a home-repair firm, discovered the bats in April while fixing a bathroom ceiling. Exterminators wouldn't touch the case because of the large numbers. The family tried to poison the bats and frighten them with flood lights and high-pitched sounds from a stereo system, but to no avail.

The ordeal has been costly to the family. Mrs. Smith estimates the new roof will set them back a few thousand dollars. They ran up a $116 phone bill last month returning calls from people offering advice from as far away as Florida.

Mrs. Smith said no one was physically hurt by the bats. But she took her six-year-old daughter to a psychiatrist because the girl refused to go to bed by herself after finding a bat in her room.

Victoria's only authorized Datsun Dealer.

Nissan Automobile is proud to announce the appointment of Saunders & Hitchman Datsun Centre as the new exclusive Datsun dealership for Greater Victoria.

Saunders & Hitchman, well known in the community as experts in the import car field, brings Victoria a great new Datsun facility. S & H has sold thousands of cars during its career of almost 30 years and has established a reputation for honesty and integrity. A reputation that will assure Datsun buyers of fair dealings, no matter what car or truck they purchase.

Come and inspect S & H Datsun Centre for yourself — the service after sales people. You'll have the opportunity to meet the great Datsun Team, including General Sales Manager Dave Stevenson, Parts Manager Al Fischer and Service Manager Herb Grew. They're all dedicated to giving you the very best in quick, courteous service. They want you to be happy with your Datsun.

S & H were impressed with the Nissan attitude and variety of Datsun vehicles. Datsun delivers the overall design, quality of construction, and longterm value that today's car buyer needs. The very best in after-sales service is the trademark of the S & H Team.

The S & H Datsun lineup includes family-size cars, economy cars, sports cars and hard-working trucks. Each has been built to give Canadian buyers the finest long-term value possible. While imported cars have increased in cost, S & H feels that their value has increased even more, especially when all the standard features, extras on most domestic cars, are considered.

Datsun's 6 years of rust protection also helps these cars maintain their excellent value and provide continuing satisfaction.

The many customers and acquaintances of Saunders & Hitchman are invited to visit both their locations, and see the full line of Datsun cars and trucks.

Pots and kettles

Has there ever been a more outrageous case of the pot calling the kettle black than the recent complaints about beer gardens from Victoria's hotel owners?

In a letter to city council, the hotel owners waxed indignant over the so-called low standards of a recent beer garden held by the Associated Commercial Travellers in the Inner Harbor. The garden, they said, detracted from the tourist image of Victoria. It was dirty and unsanitary, the rock music was too loud, there was too little supervision to ensure that underage patrons were not being served. People were getting drunk and making rude remarks to passersby.

Now it well may be that there were some problems with the ACT beer garden. Amplified rock music, for example, is probably not suitable for an outdoor facility in a built-up location. Council should consider these matters when applications are made to hold beer gardens next year.

If the hotelmen are serious about cleaning up drinking establishments in Victoria, a fair number of them could begin by cleaning up their own. Huge beer barns with no entertainment at all and stale potato chips in vending machines are little improvement over even the worst beer garden.

Most of them become dirty-looking after they've been open a few hours each day. Although many bar managers try hard to supervise their patrons, it's always possible to find some underaged patrons and some already inebriated customers being served in some bar around town. By the end of the evening every beer parlor is chock full of very drunk patrons who stumble out onto the sidewalk to make rude remarks to anyone unfortunate enough to be passing by at closing time. Several are locations for frequent fights, brawls and disturbances.

One suspects that perhaps a truer motivation for the hotelmen can be found in their complaint: "We feel that any industry that pays to the Victoria area more than $2 million in taxes and has a combined payroll of well over $23 million should have some say in how the beer garden should be run if it has detrimental effects on this industry or tourists visiting our city."

In other words, the hotelmen don't like the competition being provided by the beer gardens. They feel that because they are a major industry in the city, the city should allow them either to take over the competition or at least help regulate it. This makes about as much sense as saying that existing major sawmills in a town should be able to help the government regulate new, independent operators that want to set up small mills in the same area.

But the hotelmen shouldn't worry. If the beer gardens are really as rotten as they claim, then surely no one will go to them. If the hotel operations are so much better, surely everyone would prefer to patronize those beer parlors.

If the only choice the customer has is between pots and kettles, however, it's not suprising that some choose pots and some choose kettles.

Labor Day

Nine years ago the then-president of the B.C. Federation of Labor lamented over the demise of the celebration of the original intent of Labor Day. "Labor Day," Ray Haynes said, "was established to honor wage earners in general and industrial workers in particular." But, he went on the say "in 1970 what do we find? Provincial and civic governments do nothing to honor the working people of our province."

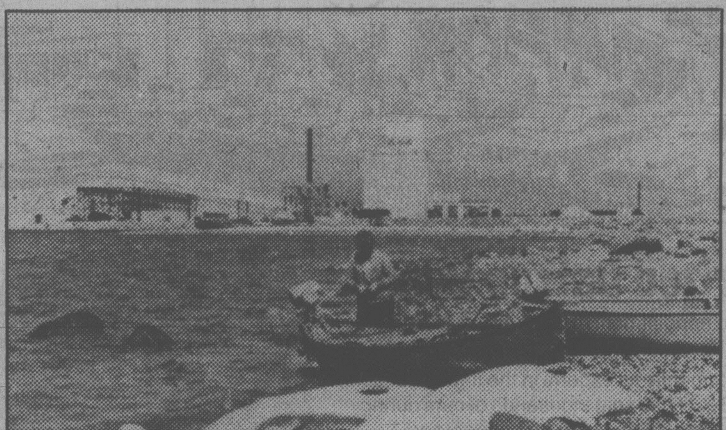
Today, Haynes wouldn't have to make any revision to that speech. In most quarters of Canadian society Labor Day doesn't mean much more than a day off work and one last three-day fling before summer fades?

The fact that little ceremonial attention is paid by government, is likely a reflection of a majority of people's suspicion of the power and sheer size of modern day trade unions.

Few would dispute the contributions made to society by the trade union movement since Labor Day was first declared a national holiday in 1894. Things like a 40-hour week, paid vacations and statutory holidays, and improvements to working conditions. But now, as union power is used in many cases to hold the public, business and government to ransom over questionable demands, it's little wonder that this Labor Day weekend most people will take the opportunity to get as far away as they can from any talk of labor.

FRED CLEVERLEY

Let's not abandon Churchill



Churchill: will it be left deserted by grain port closure?

WINNIPEG - Few Prairie farmers were surprised when Jack Murta, the Conservative member of Parliament for Lisgar, a constituency near Winnipeg, was appointed chairman of a parliamentary committee set up to take yet another look at grain transportation. Murta had been passed over for the prime job — minister of agriculture — many Manitobans thought he would get.

The surprising thing for prairie farmers was the recommendation, contained in the committee report over Murta's signature, that the port of Churchill in northern Manitoba be abandoned as far as grain shipments were concerned.

Although Murta quickly jumped on the publicity given this section of the report, describing it as exaggerated, and saying that the recommendation was not really a recommendation, he was unable to quiet the uproar.

The fact that anyone has the audacity to mention the problems of shipping grain through Churchill in public has produced some unusual alliances. The Manitoba Wheat Pool, for example, has supported Murta in the recommendation that the port be abandoned as a grain point. The Manitoba cabinet, led by Premier Sterling Lyon and Agriculture Minister Jim Downey, is unswerving in its opposition, and has picked up, as a most unusual ally, the National Farmers' Union.

Practical economics

The recommendation, if it is a recommendation, demonstrates an unusual trait that is found in many Conservative governments. Once elected. Conservatives seem to abandon political sensitivities in favor of practical economics.

From a viewpoint of economics, there is much to be said for shipping grain from the prairies, not through Churchill, but through Vancouver and Thunder Bay. In fact, the amount of grain throughput for Churchill has been dropping steadily, and may not exceed 20 million bushels this year.

Churchill has many disadvantages as a grain port. Its shipping season is about 100 days. The rail line linking the port to Winnipeg is built over muskeg, and the last 180 miles cannot take grain hopper cars that are more than half full, because full cars have so high a centre of gravity that they are in danger of tipping on the spongy line.

The Murta report points out that the same cars that are tied up on the Churchill line could move an extra eight million bushels of grain each year if they were routed to Thunder Bay, with its superior loading facilities.

Against these disadvantages, the advantages are minimal. Churchill has fewer labor problems than either Thunder Bay or Vancouver, but even if its storage was used to capacity the upper limit of shipments would be around 30 million bushels of grain a season.

The problems could be solved. The shipping season could be extended, if an ice breaker was assigned to the route. More storage space could be provided, the rail line could be improved.

None of these improvements could be justified on the basis of grain alone. The port's cargo would have to include incoming, as well as outgoing produce.

It is the possibility of this expansion, and not simply the grain trade, that has generated the most vigorous opposition to the Murta report. Churchill could be a mid-continent deep-water port, and have all the cost advantages of such a port, if normal tariffs were applied.

However, western Canadians have long known that the cost of importing through Churchill, once rail charges are added, is always slightly higher than importing through eastern Canadian ports. Although the point is argued endlessly, the suspicion in the west is that the rates are conveniently adjusted to insure the use of ports such as Montreal and Toronto.

The same suspicion is aroused whenever successive federal governments argue the impossibility of servicing Churchill with an icebreaker.

Those who oppose Murta's recommendation include politicians who live in hopes that some future government in Ottawa may decide to allow Churchill to reach the potential many westerners believe it has.

The danger in the Murta recommendation is not that grain will be dropped from Churchill, but that if it is, then Churchill will cease to exist as a port at all.

Although it would be costly to put into place the improvements that could make Churchill viable as a deep-water seaport, the costs would be minimal compared to reactivating a port that has once been abandoned.

Only a memory

Churchill once had one of the busiest airports in Canada, when a refuelling base was operated there by the Strategic Air Command. The only remaining evidence of this activity are the long, concrete runways.

Churchill once had a busy northern army base. The buildings that housed it, long since abandoned, are being systematically removed. Churchill once had a CBC radio station, but this, too, has become only a memory.

It may be more economical to route Prairie grain away from Churchill down to the last bushel, but prairie businessmen, farmers and politicians think the extra cost should be carried.

What is really hurting is that the issue, long thought to be dead, has been revived by a living Conservative member of parliament.

A story from Justine: Don't blame the children

Some stories can only be told in the words of their authors.

The column this week is devoted to the words of an 18-year-old girl who was attracted by the stories in the Times about Victoria's street-kids. She wrote us about her life, so, as she said, "you know all street kids can't be blamed for what they are doing." She asks that we call her only Justine to protect the privacy of her and her family.

This is Justine's story:

". . . my father was white, my mother is Indian. May father was killed when I was five. My mother had 16 children from different husbands. I am the fourth youngest. I have 14 half-brothers and sisters.

"I was adopted when I was six by my father's daughter — in other words, by my half-sister. I spoke nothing but Indian until I was seven. My stepmother hated my mother, so she would beat me up a lot. I started running away from her place when I was eight.

"Our neighbors complained to the police because when I was getting beat up I would scream a lot, but when the police started checking up on my step-parents, they moved up to Quesnel. My step-sister also adopted my brother when he was nine. He turned into a street kid. He is going to be 20 in December. . .

"When we moved to Quensel, we moved onto a 200-acre ranch. My parents said, 'We moved up to the ranch so they could have privacy.' The beatings became worse and worse, and more and more often. My brother and I were always close, so we would always take off together, but we always got caught and sent back home, until I went to school one day with two black eyes and a broken collarbone. That was when the welfare stepped in and took my brother and me out. . .

"We both were made wards of the court, and sent to different foster homes; I was 10 at the time. I was continually in foster homes; my longest stay in a foster home was seven months.

"I finally asked the judge when I was 13 if I could go out and fend for myself. The judge finally agreed. So I worked as a waitress and put myself through Grade Nine (that's as far as I went in school). I then went to Bella Coola to work on a ranch as a cook. I stayed working in the Bella Coola area, drifting from one ranch to another when the jobs ran out. . .

"I am no angel in white. I was an alcoholic and I drifted into smoking pot. But I did not get in as much trouble as my brother, Mallory (not his real name) did.

"I moved down to Victoria to try to find my mother. I found her, but what do you say to a mother that you haven't seen for 13 years? Mom lives in Vancouver on what I call Skid Road. Mom has no happiness and she lives the only kind of life that she knows. . .

"I have no police record except for a runaway. I came out lucky.

"My brother got into heroin . . . and in and out of trouble. He is now in Oakalla prison for stealing and for stabbing a guy. This is his fourth or fifth time in jail.

"I turned to booze and pot, but I no longer do either very much any more. I smoke pot now, but no booze, and I only smoke pot when I can afford to buy it.

I did not believe in what my brother done. He robbed off of me when I was working, etc. but I still love him. I really do pity him more than anything. I tried to help him, but he didn't want help. . .

The only thing I give my step-parents any credit for is that they taught me how to work. . . I do know how to work and I know how to work hard. . . That is all I give them credit for. I do not keep in touch with them any more, for I don't like them.

"My brother is the one I pity, not me. He has had life tough. I had life tough, but I stayed out of trouble. I had friends that helped me too, though my brother didn't. He figured nobody cared, but when friends tried to help him, he treated them rotten.

"I am just writing to you so that you know all street-kids can't be blamed for what they are doing. If you look into their life a bit more, you will probably find that most of the street-kids' parents abused them. Would you stick around parents that beat and kick you around as though you were a rag doll? People should put themselves in the kids' place before they judge them.

"I really don't believe in what the street-kids do, but I can't really blame them for if I didn't have friends that cared, I would have just turned out like them, and like my brother."

What else is there to say in this, the International Year of the Child? — B.McL.

Meaner than ever

Is Grace McCarthy trying to prove that she can be meaner than our former minister of human resources? If so, she is succeeding.

How many beef roasts and steaks have she and her family had this month? I haven't been able to afford one of either kind; even ground beef is now out of reach. Last month I was able to buy one carton of cottage cheese and a quart of milk. But this month I can't. She fixed that with the latest cut in our income. Ottawa granted us a little extra as a cost of living bonus. But she doesn't think we deserve it. (I gross less money now than I did the beginning of May '79.) So she took it away from us, regardless of the fact that living costs have gone up in the last four months.

We didn't ask Mrs. McCarthy for rental aid. When she and her party were buying votes, she wrote to us individually and told us to move into better living quarters as she would give us rental aid. Now she takes it back and leaves us with our higher rent and no cost of living bonus.

I am an arthritic and find it hard to write any more. — A. Sauter, Victoria.

Worse problems

Re: the news item concerning dogs at the Oak Bay council meeting.

Once again, after many times, the hassle about dogs comes up. I have lived in Oak Bay for 60 years, and have yet to see a dog problem.

I don't have a dog of my own anymore, and if the odd dog coming around was the only problem that I had, I would feel very fortunate. The bit about the chap putting the "poop" in the tweedy man's jacket is probably very funny, if you have a warped sense of humour. It's too bad the tweedy gent didn't deck him.

Seriously, why don't we get our priorities straight? Instead of leash control for dogs, why not a leash control for the vandals and hoodlums who are running around. Just take a walk around once in a while and have a good look at what is really happening. Benches around the waterfront are constantly being ripped up and overturned or smashed; street and stop signs broken, or pulled up and thrown around; paint sprayed on anything handy; beer, wine and pop bottles smashed on the roads or thrown all over lawns and boulevards.

Then we have these creeps who get their jollies out of cruising around until they find the most immaculately kept lawns, and then drive their vehicles all over them, leaving deep ugly ruts and heartbreak for the owners. Also the break and enter cases with the theft and vandalism; we can't put Christmas decorations outside anymore as the lights are either stolen or broken.

Any of the above are a hell of a lot worse than the odd dog dropping around, in my opinion. I would suggest the council send a total cost statement each year, with the tax notice to residents, of what the above listed acts of vandalism are costing. I'll wager when we find out what the cost is, we'll forget about the little damage from dogs, and start howling about the real problems.

Let's quit nit-picking and go after the things that really count. — J. Wilkison, 900 Linkleas Avenue.

Subsidizing rescue

I agree with Ray Skelly about the need for adequate search and rescue facilities, and I admire the brave people who operate them; but surely this service should be provided on a "user pay" basis, perhaps by some form of compulsory insurance for those likely to need it.

Personally, as a poor peasant who doesn't own a yacht or private plane, I resent having my taxes used to subsidize those who can afford such luxuries. — J. Langley, Victoria.

Is it FAIR?

Although eminently FAIR, the proposed new system of the ICBC can only be faulted for not going far enough. Not only should the careless driver pay $300 towards the damage his recklessness has caused, he should be liable for the total damage he has so unthougthfully caused, plus a penalty of 25 percent above the disbursements, including overhead charges. Furthermore, he should be refrained from using meter parking for the next three years and wear a crash helmet while driving as his sign of penitence and shame. The resulting savings would enable us to hire more politicians to make our lives even more equitable. — Wilf Wlochal, 109 Ontario Street.

Moped defence

As a regular motor-scooter commuter I must say I took strong exception to the comments put forth by your correspondents Mr. K. Gray and Ms. Anne Grahn (Times, Aug. 28).

The old habit of judging an entire group by the actions of a few was never more obvious than in their letter. Granted, there are those driving motor-scooters, or more accurately, mopeds, who flaunt the rules of the road, but I would wager that there are proportionately far more motorists committing far more flagrant violations than the lowly moped operator.

Most moped operators are mature, experienced drivers looking for a simple, inexpensive answer to the rising cost of fuel. That a few inexperienced rental riders or hot dogs should give a bad name to the conscientious majority is truly unjust.

I suggest to Mr. Gray and Ms. Grahn that in future they exercise greater care, and above all more patience when approaching a moped (which incidentally is quite capable of maintaining the city speed limit) and your close calls will undoubtedly disappear. — David R. Duke, 1956 Brighton Avenue.

Ellen Goodman

Does it take more guts to leave or to stay?

Once, when I studied history for a non-living, I became fascinated with emigrants. For a time I read everything I could find about the people who left for America, about their profound disruption, their strengths, their heroism.

Perhaps it was my prejudice as an American, but in those days I thought very little about the people who stayed behind.

But lately I've been wondering about the difference between those who emigrated and those who didn't. I wonder whether one person remained in Ireland or Italy or Russia because he was content or because he was resigned. I wonder whether another left because she was desperate or because she was hopeful. Was one person more adventurous or another more committed?

In the most desperate moments — the potato famines, the pogroms — which took the greater strength of character: endurance or uprooting? Who were the heroes and who were the martyrs? The emigrants or those who remained behind?

I am thinking about this, I'm sure, because many of my friends are turning 40. It began happening three years ago and will, at this rate, continue for at least another five.

Forty is, I observe from not too great a distance, an awkward age. It's an age at which people have histories and options. At 30, they had perhaps less history. At 50, perhaps fewer options.

But at 40, it hangs in the balance. The status quo is weighed against the possible. The person we thought we might be, still challenges the person we are. At 40, many reassess themselves and their circumstances. They try to come to terms with their limits or to break out of them.

I don't want to force the emigrant analogy. For many of our ancestors, the only option was survival and the only feeling was despair. But for a people who now contemplate leaving lives the way their forebearers left homelands, the comparison is fair enough.

I think we have as much difficulty knowing what is right or wrong, what is brave or foolish, destructive or adventurous, resigned or realistic when we look at our modern lives.

I know, for example, a writer who turned 40 and decided that he was, after all, only a minor talent. He would never be Will Shakespeare, he said, and settled down to a job writing advertising copy. Was he a quitter or a realist? Did he sell himself short or did he find his place?

I know a woman who turned 40 and decided after years of marital indecision and separation that this was her husband, her life — this was "it." It was, she said, okay. Did she settle for less or did she settle down?

On the other hand, there is the 40-year-old man who decided that his history was rot and, to change his future, he left much of the past. How does one judge his action? By just how intolerable his circumstances were? By what his future brings? Did it take more guts to leave than to stay?

My mind curves around all these things like a question mark. It is hard to hold still long enough to make sense of them. I wonder again if we can only judge actions by motivations. Is the person who endures masochistic or virtuous? Is the person who takes off sane or irresponsible?

Introspection is as painful as it is inevitable. At some time in our lives, especially our mid-lives, we take stock like a department store. We face our selves and our circumstances. We try to be reasonable about our lives, compare what we have (and could lose) with what we might have. We talk about the necessity of compromising and the fear of compromising ourselves. Our satisfactions battle our fantasies.

We try to make rational judgments, I suppose, about protecting the status quo or changing it. But in the end, some of us emigrate to our new worlds and some of us stay with the familiar. And the future historians will have trouble understanding the differences.

New Zealand to split?

By RICHARD LONG

WELLINGTON, N.Z. — South Island separatists have begun a battle in New Zealand to divide the nation at Cook Strait, the turbulent 12-mile stretch of water that separates the country's North and South Islands.

After well-attended meetings and promises of support, the South Island Movement, which has its base in the southern Scottish city of Dunedin, plans to petition Parliament for a separate state within a New Zealand federation.

Like their cousins, the Scottish Nationalists, the members of SIM point to their region's natural resources and claim they would be better off to go it alone, divorced from the bureaucray in Wellington.

New Zealand Prime Minister Robert Muldoon has described the movement as "ludicrous." But that has not bothered its spokesmen, who are fired with enthusiasm and the thought of controlling their own territory.

The South Island is a magnificent land of mountains and lakes, rich coal resources, abundant hydro-electric power and fertile farmland such as the Canterbury Plains, which supports the lamb raised for the British market.

At independence meetings one of the movement's founders, Dunedin dentist Paul Powell, has maintained the centralization of power in New Zealand's North Island has made some sort of independence for the South both necessary and inevitable.

George Morton, also of Dunedin, says a South Island state would have a favorable balance of payments. Dunedin publisher Brian Turner quotes Macaulay: "The reluctant obedience of distant provinces generally costs more than it is worth."

The spokesmen have even offered to send out ships to pick up any North Island refugees trying to flee across Cook Strait.

The independence movement, which appeals to the naturally independent nature of the Scottish population in New Zealand's deep south, has its seeds in economic discontent. The South is concerned about the drift of population, industry and wealth to the North and the apparent inability or unwillingness of the central government to do anything to stop it.

The feeling is probably strongest in Dunedin, the city established by Scottish migrants, which has a kilt-wearing Scot in its coat of arms. Originally it was called New Edinburgh until its inhabitants decided on Dunedin, the Gaelic form of Edinburgh.

The city was once the centre of power and wealth in New Zealand. It boomed during the gold rush days of the 1860s and became the country's flourishing commercial centre and home of the biggest manufacturing and mercantile businesses.

But its canny Scots inhabitants saw the writing on the wall as the gold rush ended, and they hastened the drift to the North by investing their capital in many Auckland enterprises.

In 1900 the population of both islands was about the same. Now nearly three people live in the North for every one in the South. This forces South Island industry to meet steep transport charges to get its goods to market in the heavy population areas.

The year of the butterfly

When I look back on the summer of '79, I think it will be butterflies I remember it for — not birds.

Sure, there were days that stood out because of birds. Two I'm sure I'll remember for a long time are the day I heard the Veery in Beacon Hill Park, and the day I tracked down a male Black-throated Grey Warbler whose song was giving me fits up in North Saanich. But for a sustained show that held the local stage almost continuously from April to August, the prize must go to the butterflies.

For me, the show began on a bright warm day late in April, in Uplands Park. The Camas were at their best at the time, and through their sea of blue, dozens of gorgeous Swallowtails and Mourning Cloaks chinked back and forth in the spring sunlight.

I remember thinking at the time that I'd never seen butterflies in such numbers on Vancouver Island before.

A spate of cooler, wetter weather through May dampened the butterfly show somewhat, but as things warmed up towards the end of the month they were out again in all their glory.

Again, it was the big yellow and black Swallowtails that held the stage; the Mourning Cloaks — being essentially butterflies of early spring — were seen no more.

By mid-June, striking black butterflies with orange and white markings — White Admirals — began to appear and, through the rest of that month. they and the Swallowtails vied for my attention.

Most of the time, either species would be encountered as one crossed my path briefly before heading off on whatever errand concerned it. But occasionally I'd happen on one that had set up a look-out, and in an effort to attract a mate would display itself prominently in some sunny spot.

It was interesting to watch these "territorial" butterflies, because they took exception to just about everything that moved. The Swallowtail, in such a situation, was usually fairly selective, rising only to challenge, or identify other Swallowtails. Admirals, on the other hand, rose to intercept just about everything that flew by — even Starlings.

On such occasions, I wondered why the Starlings didn't just snap that luscious tid-bit right out of the air, but throughout the summer I never saw a bird go after a butterfly. I understand from entomologists that many kinds of butterflies are not only distasteful to birds, but sometimes poisonous.

As July began to take over, the Swallowtails gradually gave way to the Admirals, and by the third week of the month, in Beacon Hill Park, I was seeing four Admirals for every Swallowtail. But by the first week of August both had become scarce, with only an occasional worn, drab-looking specimen to be seen.

By this time I began looking for Painted Ladies. They'd been common through August and September last year,but this year — so far — they've remained notable by their absence.

Some little orange-brown fellows that did show on schedule were the Skippers — Wood Skippers, I think — that became very common around my dahlias in August this year, just as they did last year. Being small, and moving quickly and erratically, I had to be quick to get a good look at a Skipper. Fortunately they're relatively tame, and if I sat quietly they'd soon settle down — sometimes three or four to a flower — and give me an opportunity to get to know them better.

And seeing three or four Skippers together on a golden-yellow dahlia is enough to make any summer worth remembering.

On Language

Mogulese explained for Yumpsville

In The Industry (formerly The Business, which replaced Hollywood, once called Movieland), a jargon has been developed that offers a sentence like this: "He packaged a world-class director and a bankable gross player, aimed at rolling it out to Yumpsville in 60 situations, was greenlighted after he took a meeting — but another element was a mouth-breather, and the writer phoned it in, and suddenly it was Tisha b'Av Nellie-time."

That vivid argot is "Movie Mogulese," and was analyzed for linguistic Javerts by producer Daniel Melnick, screenwriter David Z. Goodman and Warner Communications executive Edward Bleier.

First take a fix on suffixes: Mogulese requires an addition to words that quickly describe, and exaggerate, trends or conditions. "-ville" was the preferred form of the 50s, and still exists — "Splitsville" is the state of getting divorced — and was followed by "-erama," popularized by Cinerama and later seen on seafood restaurants named "Fisherama." The Anglicization of "-ville" brought on "City," as in "Fat City" — a state of euphoria. The preferred suffix at the moment — "-time" — harks back to early radio days, in shows directed at children before "sleepytime." Thus, a movie that loses money — once called "Disasterville," then "Bomberama," then "Flop City" — is now "Tisha b'Av Nellie-time."

(Tisha b'Av is a Jewish fast day marking the destruction of the Temple in Jerusalem, and its association with disaster is obvious, but the addition by moguls of "Nellie" is, as lexicographers say, obscure.)

Talent — not quality, but a person on the "creative side" — can be "bankable" if his name commands ready investment. Novelist Linda Palmer notes "high-Q" as a component of bankability, a play on "I.Q." but rooted in "TV-Q," a rating of actors' recognition by television viewers.

Casting is respectable, but a calibration below: I'd guess that Barbra Streisand is bankable; Jane Fonda is casting.

A superstar like Robert Redford is a "gross player," one who gets a percentage of gross revenues — "points." A poor actor is a "mouth-breather."

Newest category: "crossover star," one who can bridge the troubled waters separating special audiences, as Dolly Parton does with both country and pop singing, and as Diana Ross does with blacks and whites.

In Mogulese, these people are "elements" of a "package" that may do "good numbers" or achieve a "breakthrough," as Jaws did. Producers "greenlight" or "no-go" a deal — which, if weighted with too many "points," will "never fly." When moguls gather, they "take a meeting." Nobody meets, has a meeting, or convenes a group of colleagues: the omnipresent verb is to "take" a meeting, as if to snatch its minutes from the jaws of time or industry sharks.

Frenetic optimism is expressed by cliches like "the crew applauded after the dailies" and "the cards were great." ("The audience-reaction cards at previews are always 'great,' " sighed one producer.) A "hot" property or idea is one that has not yet been exposed to public view, or to another producer — its definition is "not yet successful."

PARTON . . . 'crossover'

If a mogul wishes to protect himself against word of mouth, he "opens broad" on a thousand "screens" in 500 "situations" — which have replaced "movie houses" or "theatres." The opposite of "opening broad" is "rolling out," as in waves, which should not be confused with "the rolling break-even," a technique by which moguls keep adding advertising costs until point players complain. As industry spokesman Jack Valenti informs me, sometimes a movie "loses its legs" after the "first runs" and flops in the "nabes" (neighborhood situations) and the "ozoners" (drive-ins).

No deal is ever "turned down" or "rejected": the universal euphemism is "I'll pass," from the card game of bridge, as if the decision can always be reviewed; an inside code is "Pasadena." A flop is a "bomb" except in England, where a bomb is a big hit. A "buck" is $100,000, 10 bucks a million. "Yumpsville" is Yahooland, where "macho" admirers of actor Charles Bronson are derogated. A writer who delivers less than his best professional effort on a screenplay is said to have "phoned it in."

In jargon as in real language, meanings change. "On spec" originally meant "on speculation," or work done in hopes of being accepted but without a prior commitment; now it has a connotation of an unnecessary effort or waste of time. When producer Melnick heard, some years ago, that his friend, screenwriter Goodman had been taken to the hospital, he telephoned to ask: "Did you really have a heart attack?" The writer gasped, "Yes, they're putting me in intensive care," and the producer said, "I'll be right over. I just didn't want to come to the hospital on spec."

Living in Syn

The federal bureaucracy, and its handmaiden, the Washington press corps, are pleased to announce the birth of a word: "synfuels," for "synthetic fuels," those delicious slices of pie in the energy sky.

On the analogy of "comsymp" (for 'Communist sympathizer") and "radiclib" (for "radical liberal"), this fusion of a phrase into a word is a boon to headline writers and other proponents of tersetalk.

Fatherhood is attributed to President Carter's domestic adviser, Stuart Eizenstat, who does not claim coinage but who popularized the new word in his June 28, 1979, "the worst of times" memo to the president: "a comprehensive interagency review now under way to examine the synfuels issue . . ."

(In that same leaked memo, Eizenstat complained of "confusion and bureaucratic tangling now occurring"; this was a new twist to the cliche "bureaucratic wrangling." The change from a wrang-to-tang was not a result of a typist's monkeyshines: "I meant 'tangle,' " reports Eizenstat. "To get a pipeline built, for example, you have to cut through a withering variety of regulations to develop a fast-track procedure. That's a 'tangle.' ")

Is "synfuels" a mere nonce word, to vanish with the gas lines, or is it viable — capable of survival and growth in Washington's linguistic bulrushes? Working against the word is its pronunciation: in the mouths of television commentators, the new coinage sounds dangerously close to an adjective that means "morally corrupt." Confusion could reign in a quickly read "the energy adviser is a synfuel man," and that report could be interpreted as a severe editorial judgment.

As fuels rush in, grammarians are likely to call any new "windfall" revenues raised to support their production "syntaxes," from the Greek "syn" (together) and "taxis" (to arrange). On second thought — maybe not.

Word of Thanks

Two giants in the world of words died recently: Eric Partridge, the lexicographer of slang and hunter of cliches and Theodore Bernstein, The New York Times authority on usage to exorcise "Miss Thistlebottom's Hobgoblins."

Both were generous with their time and would unfailingly respond to the queries of budding word watchers. An epitaph for both can be found in some lines from a poem W.H. Auden wrote on the death of Yeats:

> Time that is intolerant
> Of the brave and innocent,
> And indifferent in a week
> To a beautiful physique,
> Worships language and forgives
> Everyone by whom it lives.

You can't pay the bills with get-well cards.
When an unexpected accident or illness puts you on your back, your earning power could come to an abrupt end. So might your regular monthly paychecks.
Since get-well cards won't pay the bills, another source of income must be found to ensure your family's financial needs are met while you're unable to work.
A Great-West Life Disability Income Plan will help protect your future. And there's one just right for you and your family. Learn more about our Disability Income insurance plans by calling your Great-West Life agent today.

Can't save RV company

MONTREAL (CP) — Despite $5 million in federal and provincial aid, Produits Bellevue (1977) Ltee., which manufactures travel trailers in Thetford Mines, Que., is on the brink of bankruptcy.

Vancouver-based Impala Industries is suing the beleaguered company for damages of $3.8 million for alleged failure to meet delivery dates.

Suppliers have refused to extend credit to Bellevue for a long time and the company hasn't made a rental payment to the Federal Business Development Bank in months.

Impala wants to cancel a long-term contract signed last February under which Bellevue promised to deliver 250 motor homes built to Impala specifications this year and 500 next year.

Impala owner John Ostaf said this week Bellevue insisted on a long-term contract to help it arrange financing of supplies. Ostaf said he had to buy from manufacturers in western Canada and the United States when Bellevue delivered only 20 of the vehicles.

Layoffs have reduced a work force which peaked at 250 but is now down to about 50.

"Fifteen guys were laid off last Friday (Aug. 24) and another 30 are going next Friday," said Edgar Leduc, the president of the factory union.

Company executive Jean-Paul Jolicoeur said business was pretty bad: "Money is scarce and the orders aren't coming in."

Bellevue is owned half by the Quebec government and half by Bellevue president Conrad Lessard.

The Quebec department of industry and commerce department became half-owner with two represemtives on the board of directors as a condition of a $3-million loan in 1977 from its Industrial Development Corp.

Industry Minister Rodrigue Tremblay said only that the case is under study.

"We have no particular statement to make," he said. "We cannot comment."

Mattel seeking Macmillan Inc.

NEW YORK (AP) — Mattel Inc., the largest toymaker in the U.S., has announced plans to take over publisher Macmillan Inc. for $329 million in the latest move in a stepped-up diversification drive.

The agreement in principle for the takeover is the latest in a long series of mergers in the $5-billion-a-year publishing industry. Barron's magazine shows there were 215 mergers in the industry in the 10 years ending in 1977.

The merger pace continued through this summer, as the Hawthorne, Calif.-based Mattel bought Western Publishing in June for $121 million in cash and stock. But Mattel may meet opposition in its bid for Macmillan, long rumored to be a takeover candidate.

H. K. Porter Co. Inc., a Pittsburgh-based maker of industrial equipment, this year purchased 8.4 per cent of Macmillan's stock and said recently it planned to buy up to 15.4 per cent of the publisher's shares.

Under terms of the Mattel merger, Macmillan stockholders would receive an undisclosed combination of cash, Mattel common shares and debentures, all worth $24.50, for each of the 12.5 million Macmillan common shares.

UNIVERSITY OF VICTORIA

DEVELOPMENT COMMISSIONER

The Position

The Capital Regional District (Greater Victoria) requires an Economic Development Commissioner whose primary responsibility will be to assist in the establishment of new business enterprises and expansion of existing businesses within the Greater Victoria area. Specific duties will be to provide prospective investors with information and guidance on properties, labor skills and costs, transportation services, zoning regulations, sources of capital and other factors associated with establishing a business in the area.

The Commissioner will also serve on appropriate committees and will maintain close liaison with key personnel within all levels of the public sector. Responsibilities also include the coordination of research projects and control of the Commission's budget.

The successful applicant is expected to be an employee of the Capital Regional District, reporting directly to its Executive Director, but will receive general policy guidance from a Board of Directors established by by-law of the Regional District. The salary will be in the $30,000 range with a full benefit package.

The Candidate

Preferred candidates will be university graduates in economics, economic geography or a related discipline. Maturity, well developed communicative skills and the ability to work under minimal supervision are essential qualifications. Candidates should have several years of varied business experience, part of which should have been in a relatively senior management position in a small or medium sized company.

Candidates meeting the above requirements should submit detailed resumes in confidence to: The Chairman, Greater Victoria Economic Development Commission, 211 Burns House, 26 Bastion Square, Victoria, B.C. V8W 1H9.

Applications will be accepted up to September 15, 1979.

Flintkote, Louisiana-Pacific planning merger

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The $392-million merger of Flintkote Co. into Louisiana-Pacific Corp. has been approved by the directors of both firms, the two companies have announced.

Earlier this summer, Flintkote, the Stamford, Conn.-based building materials maker, had signed a tentative agreement to be acquired by a private investors' group. But negotiations regarding that sale "have been discontinued," Louisiana-Pacific and Flintkote said.

Still unclear was the eventual position of Genstar Ltd., the diversified Canadian company which owns 21.5 per cent of Flintkote's stock.

Genstar, based in Montreal, refused to comment on the merger announcement. By selling its shares to Louisiana-Pacific, it could earn as much as a $30-million profit before taxes.

Under terms of their agreement, which is subject to stockholder and U.S. government approval, Louisiana-Pacific will pay $53 a share to holders of the 7.4 million shares of Flintkote common stock.

The Flintkote shareholders also have two other options if they don't want cash:

— They can accept two shares of Louisiana-Pacific preferred stock for each share of Flintkote stock;

— Or they can take a combination of cash and stock.

Louisiana-Pacific, based here and founded in 1973 as a spinoff of Georgia-Pacific Corp., had sales of $1.04 billion and profits of $81.6 million last year.

Flintkote earned $37.7 million last year on sales of $730 million. It has 8,200 employees.

Louisiana-Pacific said the merger is expected to involve $82 million in cash and 8.2 million shares of a new issue of preferred Louisiana-Pacific stock.

Flintkote will call for redemption of its outstanding preferred stock on terms to be announced later, Louisiana-Pacific said.

Quebec, German capital pooled in freighter venture

MONTREAL (CP) — Montreal-Europe Navigation Ltd., a new company owned by three Quebec companies and a German firm, will begin operations in November to handle cargo on the North Atlantic.

Roger Paquin, president and chief executive officer of Logistec Corp., one of the three companies involved, said in an interview Montreal-Europe will operate with two chartered ships at first, with one freighter leaving Montreal every 15 days.

The freighters will also leave Rotterdam, Hamburg and a United Kingdom port every 15 days. Eventually, sailings will be scheduled every 10 days, Paquin said.

Montreal-Europe is owned by Ernst Russ of Hamburg and the Quebec companies.

The other two companies are Corporation de Gestion La Verendrye, a holding company with major interests in the trucking industry, and Navigation Sonamar, a holding company owned by Logistec, several Quebec coastal shipping companies and the Quebec government.

March Shipping Ltd., a Logistec subsidiary, will be North American agents for the new line, which will be headquartered in Hamburg.

Parkland School only —
September 4 — Grades 11 & 12 only in attendance.
September 5 — Grades 9 & 10 only in attendance.

School bus transportation, subject to available seating space will be provided for:

KINDERGARTEN Pupils regardless of distance to the nearest elementary school in which a Kindergarten class has been established.

A.M. Such pupils enrolled in the morning sessions will be transported to the school on regular bus runs. However, as the numbers do not warrant a special run at noon, the parents of such pupils may apply for a transportation allowance in lieu.

P.M. As school bus transportation to the afternoon session is not provided, the parents of such pupils enrolled in the afternoon sessions may apply for a transportation allowance in lieu. Such pupils will be transported home on regular after-school bus runs.

GRADES 1-8 Students of grades 1-8 inclusive, living more than 2½ miles from the school in their attendance area, will be provided with transportation. However, when space is available on the school bus, the students living nearest to the 2½ mile walk limit will be given preference for that space.

GRADES 9-12 Students of grades 9-12 inclusive, living more than 3 miles from their attendance area school will be provided with transportation. However, when space is available on the school bus the students living closest to the 3 mile walk limit will be given preference for that space.

The parents of a pupil living in an isolated area and for whom school bus transportation cannot be provided, may apply for a transportation allowance.

Mileage distances are calculated by the most direct route on established roads or walk areas. The distance is computed from the home property access at the road to the entry at the school site.

School bus service is provided at the discretion of the Board of School Trustees. Eligibility for bus transportation can be determined through your school Principal. Application forms are available at the school and must be completed immediately.

Request for any additional information about the bus schedules should be referred to the School Board Office, Sidney, B.C., 656-1111.

Every effort has been made to establish the bus routes to serve the greatest number of students who are entitled to school bus transportation in accordance with existing School Board Policy.

Mayne dock on ice pending trial

Construction must end immediately on a nearly 200-foot-long wharf at the Mayne Inn at Bennett Bay on Mayne Island.

And effective Tuesday, the wharf may only be used by hotel guests and owner Weldon Pinchin.

The rulings were made in B.C. Supreme Court Friday by Mr. Justice J. G. Ruttan. They will remain in force until a trial of an action by the Islands Trust for a demolition order.

Ruttan made his second ruling effective Tuesday so that a Lions Club party can be held this weekend.

He also ruled that any necessary repairs, but not additions, can be made to the structure.

Terry O'Grady, counsel for the Islands Trust, said the hotel built the wharf for a commercial purpose because it is far bigger than needed just to serve a small hotel.

He said a bylaw prohibits commercial wharves.

Vancouver lawyer Doug Robson, representing the hotel and several other respondents, argued that there is nothing about the wharf as it is now which is in breach of the zoning bylaw.

He said it is necessary for the dock to go out as far as it does to have a useful float. He said size is completely irrelevant to the issue of commercial use.

He said his clients are not prepared to concede that the use they intend to put the wharf is a commercial or industrial activity or use. He also said the bylaw's definition of industrial does not apply to this case and there is no definition of the word commercial.

Ruttan, however, ruled that there is an issue for trial because it is quite clear the hotel intended to put in a substantial jetty for a commercial purpose although it now says that won't be done.

B.C. Briefs

McGeer 'should resign'

BURNABY (CP) — British Columbia Government Employees' Union accused Education Minister Pat McGeer Friday of trying to break the union and demanded he resign.

A union spokesman said the charge stems from McGeer's interference in the deliberations of the provincial labor relations board on the status of 14 employees at the Pacific Vocational Institute here.

John Fryer, general secretary of the 46,000-member union, said the union and institute management had submitted an application to the board for a hearing, asking it to determine if the employees were part of the union's bargaining unit.

Fryer said his union was following normal board procedure when the minister apparently designated all 14 people as management exclusions by invoking his sweeping powers under the B.C. government's new Colleges and Provincial Institutes Act.

The general secretary said McGeer's interference has effectively made the board an irrelevant body.

Murder charged

PORT HARDY (CP) — Peter Rodney Giesbrecht, 20, was charged with murder Thursday following the shooting death of his father.

Jacob Rodney Giesbrecht, 59, was killed in this northern Vancouver Island village during a family dispute in his home Sunday.

Suit names RCMP

VANCOUVER (CP) — A Surrey businessman has filed a British Columbia Supreme Court action claiming damages for alleged assault and wrongful arrest and imprisonment against seven RCMP officers.

Gordon Walter Genge claims he was injured when he was arrested Jan. 28 at a condominium development recreation centre in the municipality east of Vancouver.

Named as defendants in the action were Cpl. Leonard Grinnel and constables Ronald Morse, Darrell Hough, Rayburn Ross, Robert Horton, Stewart MacDonald and Donna Jean Kaluza.

The attorney-general of B.C. is also named as a defendant.

Upside-down flag at court brings calls

Red-faced Victoria Law Court officials hastily lowered the Canadian flag over the main entrance of the building Friday after a flood of telephone calls told them the flag was upside down.

"The calls started coming in almost as soon as the flag went up," an official said later. "I don't know how it happened, someone must have been in a hurry."

Mountain claims 3rd this year

CALGARY (CP) — A California man has become the third mountain climber killed this year on Mount Assiniboine in Mount Assiniboine Provincial Park.

Park wardens said Friday the climber, whose name was withheld pending notification of next of kin, died Wednesday when he fell from the north face of the 3,600-metre peak.

The man was in a party of three that had almost reached the top of the mountain, located in the southeastern portion of the park on the Alberta-British Columbia border. Other members of the party were not injured.

Wardens said the climbers were not roped together for safety.

Rupert crash clues sought

PRINCE RUPERT (CP) — Transport Canada investigators tramped over an isolated corner of nearby Digby Island Friday, searching for clues to explain why a 10-seat Grumman Goose crashed Thursday night.

Seven people were killed and three others injured in the crash. The injured men were transferred to Shaughnessy Hospital in Vancouver where they were reported to be in satisfactory condition late Friday.

None of the victims has been identified. RCMP identified two injured men as Andy Stewart, 24, of Delta, and Antonio Stara, 48, of Vancouver.

The twin-engined amphibian plane, owned by Trans Provincial Airlines, was on a flight from Kitsault, an isolated mining community on Alice Arm, further north along the coast.

It was carrying a full load of nine passengers and one pilot. The passengers were believed to be miners and construction workers from Kitsault, site of a molybdenum mine.

The plane was bound for the seaplane base at Seal Cove here, but was planning to make a stop at Prince Rupert's airport on Digby Island when the crash occurred, said airport manager Howard Merth.

Merth said the plane went down in a B.C. Hydro right-of-way about two kilometres northeast of the airport. He did not say whether the plane hit a power line.

Merth said pilots planning to stop at Digby usually radio ahead when they are within eight kilometres of the airport. He would not say when the call came Thursday, but said "everything was as normal as it always is."

He said the bodies were removed from the crash site by helicopter. They were taken to Prince George Regional Hospital and were examined by a coroner.

Savings seen in jet fuel

VANCOUVER (CP) — Jet engine and aeronautical research projects under way in the United States promise jet fuel savings worth billions of dollars, delegates to an international aviation industry conference here were told Thursday.

Neal Saunders, representing NASA's Lewis Research Centre for jet propulsion, said the fuel savings studies followed the dramatic increase in oil prices.

Saunders told 200 delegates at the annual conference of the International Northwest Aviation Council that there are six research projects under way, three of them involving changes in airframe to improve efficiency and three others improving jet engines.

"It calls for a five-per-cent fuel saving and the technology is to be rendered in 1980," Saunders said in an interview following his submission before a panel.

Some of the work involves improving small component parts of jet engines and conversion of jet engines on large carriers.

'If all of the projects are successful, it could result in a saving in jet fuel by as much as nine million gallons a year by the year 2000," Saunders said.

One of the schemes calls for a partial return to the turbo-prop engine, which consumed 50 per cent less fuel than the jet engines.

2 firms in dogfight for B.C. short-haul routes

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

The decision by Pacific Western Airlines to try for the big leagues of all-jet flight and longer routes, has opened the door for some other firm to become the major B.C. airline for short-haul routes.

At least two companies are already in the field battling toe-to-toe and others are expected to join in.

The prize is the exclusive right to operate flights from Vancouver to major B.C. points: Victoria, Nanaimo, Port Hardy, Prince Rupert, the Okanagan and possibly up to Prince George.

Almost every week West Coast Air Services Ltd. and Airwest Airlines, both of Vancouver, announce bids for new float or land-based routes.

Both companies are well-financed and are prepared to pour big money into the venture.

At the end, the Air Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission will have to sort it all out.

It all began because of the jets. The bigger and faster they get, the further they have to fly in order to recover costs. Air Canada, for example, has a Vancouver-Calgary run but it is more interested in expanding its Vancouver-Toronto service.

Pacific Western Airlines, which handles most short-haul business in B.C and Alberta, would rather drop its short runs and concentrate mainly on the Vancouver-Edmonton-Calgary triangle.

This leaves a thriving, growing business in short-haul routes in this province.

PWA would move out of the field with some reluctance but with jets, some of their present routes no longer make economic sense.

Even the busy Victoria-Vancouver run is hardly best handled by jets. The planes are so fast they must begin landing procedures almost as soon as they take off.

Which explains the move by both Airwest and West Coast Air to offer small-craft service between Victoria and Vancouver airports if Ottawa approves.

Both companies are making attractive offers. Airwest is arguing that its airport flights would be just an extension of its float plane service.

When weather is bad, the seaplane passengers would go by bus to the airport and fly to Vancouver, where they would board a waiting bus to take them downtown.

Along with its application to Ottawa, Airwest announced it will buy two additional Twin Otter float planes for $2.5 million from the federal government's de Havilland corporation. But the purchase is not contingent upon obtaining the route as the float planes will be needed for the harbor-to-harbor run.

The West Coast Air proposal should also be attractive for Ottawa. West Coast has offered to buy one or more Dash-7 de Havilland STOL craft at $6.5 million each if awarded the airport service between Victoria and Vancouver. If not awarded the route there would be no Dash-7 purchase.

Ottawa, which has invested heavily in the Dash-7, is eager to make some sales.

Meanwhile, the two companies are actively seeking other B.C. routes.

This weekend West Coast announced it will apply for service between Vancouver and Port Hardy, Comox and Campbell River.

Airwest is also seeking additional routes on Vancouver Island and up the coast. To assist expansion in these areas, Airwest has purchased Trans-Provincial Airlines of Prince Rupert and Pacific Coast Airlines of Nanaimo. Both takeovers must be approved by the air transport committee.

Airwest will begin float plane service between Vancouver and Seattle when and if approval is granted by the U.S. Ottawa has already approved that one.

Airwest is owned by the Jim Pattison Group of Vancouver, an aggressive company that believes in continual expansion.

West Coast is financed by a group of B.C. businessmen. Its board includes Newell Morrison, former Social Credit MLA for Victoria.

Airwest does not have any Victoria directors but Pattison announced that will be remedied soon.

Both companies look upon Victoria as the focus of improved Vancouver Island service but most of the new routes they are seeking would originate in Vancouver, where the companies have their headquarters.

The battle is just beginning and if the rivalry proves too expensive, one company might offer to buy the other one, one airline executive said.

But Ottawa would have to approve that too and that discussion should generate plenty of heat in high circles.

Most VD in 20-24 age group

Venereal disease in the Capital Regional District is far more prevalent among those 20 to 24 years old than in any other age group.

Regional health officer Dr. A.S. Arneil said this was revealed when he asked for a breakdown of 1978 VD statistics to determine if there is any truth to the widespread belief that VD is rampant among teenagers.

There were 283 cases in the district in the 20-24 year age group, compared to only 127 cases in the 15 to 19-year-old bracket. There was also one 14-year-old girl who had contacted gonorrhea.

In fact, the statistics show that the next highest incidence of VD is in the 25 to 29-year-old bracket, with 153 cases reported.

The incidence drops dramatically thereafter, with 88 cases reported among people in their 30s, and 16 cases among those between 40 and 69.

Dr. Arneil has not been able to determine why the ages of 117 VD victims were not stated.

Most cases of gonorrhea in teenagers is reported in girls (80 cases, compared to 48 boys), while most post-teenage gonorrhea cases are among men (353, compared to 185).

Syphilis was rare — Of the 773 cases of VD, only 15 were syphilis.

The rate of VD among the most afflicted age group (20 to 24 years old) is 15 cases for every 1,000 residents, almost five times the average 3.4 cases for the general population.

There were 9,004 cases of VD reported in B.C. last year, a rate of slightly less than 3.6 cases for every 1,000 population.

Jury finds homicide in 'beer parlor fall'

KELOWNA (CP) — A Kelowna man, whose body was found on a street last Dec. 23, died of multiple injuries and his death was homicide, a coroner's jury ruled Friday.

The jury said Arnold Lorne Ronald Norquay, 28, died from a severe beating by a person or persons unknown.

Witnesses said prior to his death Norquey fell in a beer parlor and was propped up on a rail by the door by an employee. His body was found later on the street.

Vancouver Courier folds after 69 up-down years

VANCOUVER (UPC) — After 69 years, Vancouver's bi-weekly tabloid Courier has folded.

The paper, which went daily for only a month in July before going back to publishing bi-weekly, went out of business Friday when the bank refused to support it any longer, said managing editor Tony Simnett.

Simnett said the 65 staff members got the word Friday afternoon just as they were putting the finishing touches on Sunday's edition.

"We had produced a newspaper — it was a good one, too — and now it won't come out," said Simnett, who had just purchased an $80,000 house in Vancouver. "The paper is dead, as of now."

Publisher Robin Lecky was vacationing on Vancouver Island and could not be reached for comment. But newspaper employees said Lecky probably found out about the same time they did.

Simnett said Bill Lang, vice president of Granville Press Ltd., which published the tabloid paper, called from the bank to tell senior executives the Bank of British Columbia was no longer willing to support the paper.

The Courier, established as a weekly in 1910, mushroomed during Vancouver's bitter newspaper strike which halted publication of the two major Pacific Press dailies, the Vancouver Sun and Province, for eight months.

Near the end of the strike, Lecky and Gordon Byrn, a 34-year-old financier and major backer of the venture, jointly announced the paper was going daily. The first edition hit the streets July 4.

Then, on Aug. 14, Lecky announced the paper was going back to publishing only bi-weekly.

The official reason he gave for the switch was the movement of advertisers to radio, television and flyers and away from the print media. But he admitted later it had been Gordon Byrn's decision to pull out and take with him a reported $2 million that had caused the switch.

Byrn said he had become involved in the Courier on the understanding that certain "terms and conditions" would be met which were not. The conditions required a certain circulation and number of major advertisers by a specified date, Simnett said.

He said employees attributed the tabloid's final demise to Byrn's decision not to stick with the paper.

"I thought one employee put it best when he said, 'You directors were playing a game of poker — and we were the chips."

The Courier's history dates back to 1908 when the weekly Point Grey Gazette began publishing. The newspaper became the Kerrisdale Courier in 1948, serving the residents on Vancouver's west side, and later became the West Side Courier.

Nanaimo paper Sundays

NANAIMO (CP) — The Nanaimo Daily Free Press will begin publishing a Sunday edition Sept. 23.

John A. Farrington, publisher and general manager, said Friday the Free Press will continue to publish its regular newspaper Monday through Saturday. The Sunday edition — to be called the Sunday Extra — will be more along the lines of a magazine, he said.

"There will be no hard news in the Sunday Extra," said Farrington. "It will be an entertaining and readable package filled with 'good news' stories."

The Nanaimo Daily Free Press, one of British Columbia's oldest newspaper, was first published April 15, 1874 as a semi-weekly. It has been a daily since Dec. 4, 1888, and has been owned by Thomson B.C. Newspapers since 1954.

Before the judge

Judge Blake Allan refused a 44-year-old man's application for assessment for the Heroin Treatment Act program and handed him a three-year prison term Friday in Victoria provincial court.

Ronald Joseph Northrup, of 3023 Tillicum, pleaded guilty to possession of stolen property in connection with four chain saws, valued at about $1,900, taken during a March break-in at Alf Becker and Son Ltd., 2981 Tillicum.

Called to testify by his lawyer, Douglas Christie, Northrup told the court he is a heroin addict and has used narcotics since 1959. He said he had taken the methadone treatment twice and was on drugs at the time of the offence.

He denied Crown counsel Don Laughton's suggestion that the application for assessment was made because a three-year probation period was involved instead of a prison term.

Laughton described Northrup's criminal record as pathetic while Christie said alcohol and drugs are the cause of his client's problems.

A Wilkinson Road jail inmate who committed a robbery while out on a pass was given two years in jail by Judge William Ostler.

Kenneth Brian McKee, 23, pleaded guilty to robbery with threats of violence in a July 16, early-morning incident in which Kenneth Wayne Lawrence was robbed of $23 and his watch.

Crown counsel Richard Law said McKee, who was due for release four days after the incident, threatened to tear out Lawrence's throat at one point.

McKee was sentenced in March to six months in jail for breaking and entering and was given the pass which expired at noon, July 17.

A charge of acquiring a firearm without a permit was dropped but Ostler imposed a five-year ban on possessing any weapon.

Ostler sentenced 23-year-old Denis Wayne Molcan, of 3553 Wascana, to seven months in jail for possession of LSD for the purpose of trafficking.

Court was told Molcan was stopped in a vehicle at Douglas and View streets Aug. 6 and arrested on another matter by Victoria police. At the police station, a search produced 70 "hits" of LSD, Crown counsel Malcolm Macaulay stated. The drug has a street value of about $350.

Police then obtained a search warrant and found a small quantity of marijuana in a kitchen coffee can, Macaulay said.

Molcan had three previous drug-related convictions including one Aug. 24 this year in Victoria County Court for possession of marijuana for the purpose of trafficking. He was given a three-month jail sentence which he has been serving at Wilkinson Road jail.

Ostler imposed a one-month, concurrent sentence on the charge simple marijuana possesion and placed Molcan on 18 months probation.

Also receiving a three-month term was 19-year-old Calvin Lloyd Patterson of no fixed address.

Patterson pleaded guilty Monday to a break-in last Saturday at provincial government offices at 544 Michigan and theft of flags from the Royal Olympic Hotel on Aug. 19.

Ostler noted that the presentence report prepared on the youth was negative and indicated an "emotionally immature and irresponsible young man."

Ostler, who recommended Patterson's sentence be served in a forestry camp, imposed an 18 month probation period and ordered Patterson to perform 200 hours of community service work in connection with the theft charge.

Two drinking drivers received jail sentences after pleading guilty to having a blood-alcohol reading over .08 per cent.

Judge Harold Alder handed 33-year-old Richard William Heimecker of 982 Weaver Place a three-month term after learning that Heimecker was given 24 days in May of 1977 for two counts of the same charge.

Clive Edwin Bond, 39, of 890 Tulip, was sentenced to seven days in jail by Alder.

Bond was involved in an accident April 1 at Tolmie and Douglas which resulted in injuries and his two breath test readings were both .28, crown counsel Clinton Kittle told Alder.

Fined $50 for the same offence was 21-year-old Patrick Charles Trelawny, formerly of 11340 Chalet. In addition, he was placed on four months probation and ordered to perform 50 hours of community service work.

Auction injunction granted

Happy Valley Auction Centre, run from a rural-residential area of Metchosin, will have to close until a trial decides whether auctions are a permitted use.

Mr. Justice J. G. Ruttan of B.C. Supreme Court granted an interim injunction Friday sought by the Capital Regional District against Helena Heinrich, 3504 Happy Valley Road.

The Auction Centre is a modest operation and damages could be calculated quite readily if the Capital Regional District lost its suit, the judge said.

But, he said, losses could not be calculated for nearby residents and he added that he did not think he was being rash in drawing the conclusion that the auctions would cause a nuisance to neighbors.

Don Farquhar, counsel for the Capital Regional District, said a bylaw lists uses to which lands in rural zones may be put and auctions aren't included.

But Ross McLarty, counsel for Mrs. Heinrich, argued that an auction is a home occupation because it is incidental to the use of the dwelling.

He said the regulations do not prohibit auctions so his client has a common-law right to conduct auctions.

Suspended sentence for man on sex charge

A 27-year-old man who pleaded guilty to having sexual intercourse with a girl under 14 was given a suspended sentence Friday and placed on probation for three years by county court Judge E.J.C. Stewart.

The offence occurred between Feb. 1 and 28 this year and involved a girl just a few months short of her 14th birthday.

Defence counsel Nicholas Lott said Paul David Franks and the girl were dating for four months and it was a clear case of consent which, while not a defence to the charge, should be considered in sentencing.

There was little emotional damage to the girl and Franks, whom he described as honest, religious and hard-working, had left Victoria to make a new life for himself.

Judge Stewart said this type of offence, which carries a maximum penalty of life in prison, at first glance usually results in strong emotional reactions.

But he noted that had the sexual intercourse occurred a few months later, it would not be a Criminal Code offence.

He said from all the information given him he was not able to detect any sinister sexual threat to young girls generally from Franks.

Melin appointed detective sergeant

Victoria police deputy chief Jim Smith Friday announced the promotion of Dale Alexander Melin to the rank of detective sergeant effective today.

Melin, 41, joined the police department on Nov. 1, 1963 and served in the patrol and traffic division until 1974 when he joined the youth squad.

He was transferred to the detective division two months ago.

Bail refused

A 38-year-old American, accused of conspiracy to import marijuana, was denied bail in county court Friday.

Judge E.J.C. Stewart had been asked to review the detention order of provincial court Judge Fred Green July 27 against William Terry Hines of San Rafael, Calif.

Hines is one of 23 Americans, Costa Ricans and Colombians accused of conspiracy to import 33.4 tons of marijuana said to have a wholesale value of $50 million aboard the freighter Samarkanda on May 22.

The men were arrested in a combined operation involving 50 members of the RCMP and 300 servicemen aboard the destroyer HMCS Qu'Appelle in Sydney Inlet, 32 kilometres northwest of Tofino.

Two boats were also seized — the 51-metre Panama-registered Samarkanda and the 16-metre Whitecap, an American vessel registered in Seattle.

All 23 men are in custody. Some have been denied bail while others have not applied.

The preliminary hearing will be held in November and December.

Daon's 9-month profits triple 1978

VANCOUVER (CP) — Daon Development Corp. reported Friday net earnings for the the nine-month period ended July 31, is about triple the amount of net earnings for the corresponding period in 1978.

A company press release said net earnings were $26,060,000, or $1.34 a share on revenue of $296,652,000 for the nine month period, compared with $8,730,000 or 64 cents a share in the comparable period last year.

Company president Jack Poole said the outlook for 1979 is exceptionally strong.

"It now appears the fourth quarter net earnings will be a record for the company," he said. "This ensures that 1979 will be by far the most successful year in the company's 15-year history and we look forward to continued growth as we enter the 1980s."

Coast tanker route opposed by Clark

VANCOUVER (CP) — Prime Minister Joe Clark said Friday that his government is opposed to tankers carrying Alaska oil down the Pacific coast.

However, he did not say whether he favors the only route which does not call for supertankers — the proposed Foothills pipeline through the Yukon, British Columbia and Alberta to the lower 48 states.

The two other proposals call for the use of tankers to ship oil either to Kitimat, B.C., or to Port Angeles, Wash., across the Strait of Juan de Fuca from Victoria.

Talking with reporters after a meeting with businessmen, Clark said "the position of my government is very clear — we would oppose tanker routes along the coast of British Columbia."

Energy Minister Ray Hnatyshyn said earlier this week he is looking at all proposals for transporting Alaskan oil and that the government would make up its mind about a route by a Nov. 15 deadline set by U.S. President Carter.

Carter wants a Canadian government recommendation by that time so he can make his decision on Alaskan oil movements by the end of the year. Hnatyshyn was responding to a Liberal party charge that the government is dragging its feet in making a decision.

The previous Liberal government opted for the overland route proposed by Foothills Pipe Lines (Yukon) Ltd.

After Hnatyshyn made his comment, Environment Minister John Fraser said the cabinet has rejected a proposal to ship oil down the coast to Kitimat and then overland. The federal cabinet minister from B.C. said he was asking his colleagues to reject any tanker proposal.

Meanwhile, in Calgary, Clark spent 2½ hours here in private discussions with Premier Peter Lougheed, but refused to comment on whether any progress had been made on the contentious issue of oil pricing.

The prime minister faces a major problem in resolving the conflicting interests of the oil-consuming provinces and Alberta, the primary oil producer.

He has called meetings with a number of provincial premiers in an effort to reach agreement on a way of increasing the domestic price to world levels without causing unnecessary suffering in the consuming provinces.

Clark avoided reporters' questions on the issue and said merely: "I was pleased to see (Lougheed) continuing to take a very positive attitude toward the goal of national energy self-sufficiency."

Lougheed was unavailable for comment on the meeting, held in the premier's downtown apartment.

Earlier in the day, Clark told a Canadian Club meeting in Vancouver that Canada has extraordinary potential in energy and human resources.

"The potential of this country is literally unparalleled," he said.

This country's problems pale when compared with those of almost every other country, he told the audience of about 1,000.

Radio ops strike cuts air traffic

Canadian Press

A strike by airport radio operators delayed air traffic in large centres across Canada on Friday and today two B.C. airports had only emergency service.

Airports at Tofino and Prince Rupert were operating on an emergency basis.

Most other B.C. airports were reported on designated service, which means skeleton staffs were providing the safety and security duties they are required by contract to maintain during a strike, such as assistance to aircraft in search operations.

Firefighters work in shifts mopping up after inferno

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — Firemen worked late Friday night and early today to mop up after a fire that raged through docks on the Fraser River Friday.

No damage estimates were yet available as two shifts of eight New Westminster firemen took turns watching the site.

Captain Mit Shama said late Friday that cranes were pulling apart what was left of the dock and a dredge was flooding the remains of the fire.

"We're just hosing down the hot spots now," he said.

About 100 firemen battled the blaze that was apparently set off by an explosion aboard a log salvaging boat that then touched creosote-soaked pilings at Pacific Coast Terminals.

At its height, the fire stretched for about 400 metres along the underside of the eight-metre-wide dock. It was being fed by oil spilled in the river Thursday.

The docks have been used in recent weeks for loading large quantities of flour for the export market.

Pacific Coast Terminals is New Westminster's major dock. It is owned by First Capital City Corp., a company jointly owned by the city of New Westminster and the B.C. Development Corp.

Firemen's efforts were hampered by the thick, black smoke which towered over the city. Shama said the smoke came from burning creosote-soaked timber and pilings, and the asphalt surface of the dock.

"Blacktop burns like gasoline — lots of black smoke and its hard to see."

Firemen from other nearby municipalities aided in firefighting efforts. At least six tugboats were used. Several firemen suffered minor injuries in the blaze.

"This looks like the biggest fire in New Westminster since the Rayonier sawmill fire in 1966," said Mayor Muni Evers.

B of M increases U.S. loan rate

MONTREAL (CP) — The Bank of Montreal Friday announced an increase in its U.S. base lending rate to 12.75 per cent from 12.5 per cent, effective immediately. The rate is the one at which the bank lends U.S. funds in Canada, and the increase reflects current market conditions for U.S. dollars here, a bank spokesman said.

nance investments outside B.C., such as the recent purchase of Ashland Oil, it says.

The proposed strategy calls for the NDP, if elected, to regain control of resource revenues by keeping the natural resources in public ownership and setting up crown corporations to maintain and develop strong B.C.-controlled enterprise in key sectors of the economy.

These would include a B.C. Coal Corporation to engage in exploration, development and marketing of B.C.'s coal and other mineral resources, and a B.C. Land Development Corporation to service and market urban land.

The strategy also calls for return of the B.C. Resources Investment Corporation to public control where it would have an expanded role in the marketing and developing of B.C. forest products.

All royalty and stumpage charges would be altered and, where necessary, marketing agencies would be set up to collect "a fair return from private firms for our natural resources."

The report calls for improvement to the management of the resource base through expanded reforestation programs, a comprehensive program of intensive forest management to increase productivity, a continuation of the Salmonid Enhancement Program to strengthen the B.C. fishing industry and the continued preservation of B.C.'s prime agricultural land.

The study recommends that the government reduce economic instability by better timing of investments and reducing taxation during periods of high unemployment.

The strategy, which has been two years in the making, is expected to get a rough ride from delegates who are complaining that it does little more than maintain the status quo.

Opening the convention Friday, NDP president Gerry Stoney noted that the party now has nearly 60,000 paid members. He said the past year had been a tough one because both provincial and federal election campaigns were held simultaneously.

Stoney said many people, from both inside and outside the NDP were giving their five free shares in the B.C. Resources Investment Corporation to the party for safe-keeping and "to ensure that the assets owned by the people of B.C. stayed in the hands of the people of B.C."

The 603 delegates attending the meeting were told that the party ended its fiscal year Dec. 31 with a deficit of $91,000 on revenues of $666,000.

know we are not saints, but we are doing everything possible to look after the safety of everyone in the country," he said.

Binaisa's problem is that he has little real authority. The Ugandan army and police force disintegrated after President Idi Amin's overthrow last April, and the 25,000 Tanzanians stationed in Uganda to keep the peace are responsible for much of the killing, robbing and raping that has claimed thousands of victims.

No one is sure precisely who the roaming bands of killers are or whether their motives are political or monetary. Last weekend, murder victims included Woitek Popiel, a professor who worked for the U.N. environmental program, as well as a Ugandan doctor, two city health workers and three other persons.

The Uganda government refused a diplomatic request two months ago to provide security for official residences and has not responded to demands since then. It has, however, confined the Tanzanian troops to their barracks when they are not on duty and sent the Ugandan guerrilla army into the countryside, a decision that brought minor relief to worried Kampala residents.

Meanwhile, diplomats in Kampala report the emergence of many vigilante groups throughout the country.

Interim director replacing Ruff

Labor Minister Allan Williams Friday named civil servant Maurice Guilbault as acting director of the ministry's human rights branch.

He replaces former director Kathleen Ruff, who resigned to appear on the CBC-TV program Ombudsman.

Guilbault will hold office until a permanent director is appointed, said Williams.

Guilbault, an ex-RCAF member, teacher, trucker, store-owner and property manager, joined the human rights branch in 1974 and was promoted to supervisor four years later.

Ruff caused controversy on several occasions with criticism in the media of government and human rights practices in the province.

Hal Coulson . . . 'A bit like detective work'

'It's the king of hobbies, and the hobby of kings'

By JANE COVERNTON
Times Staff

Victoria is the biggest little stamp-collecting centre in the world, says Fort Street stamp dealer Ron Thiel.

Even allowing for some boosterism on his part, it seems that stamp-collecting is immensely popular here.

There are two stamp-collecting clubs for adults and one for children and several stores catering to the trade.

Why the popularity?

"Stamp-collecting is the king of hobbies and the hobby of kings," says Thiel.

Apart from that, the large number of retired people in Victoria makes this town a natural.

Many retired folk seem to enjoy the mild thrill of discovery, the vicarious knowledge of far parts of the world, and the satisfaction of putting together a perfect collection.

Says Hal Coulson, president of the V.I. Philatelic Society: "Everybody has their own reason for collecting. It's a bit like detective work. I like putting together the parts, chasing down a stamp, going here, looking there."

A long time ago someone gave him a stamp book for Christmas. Since then he's put it away and come back to it several times. That's the kind of hobby it is.

Now Coulson specializes in stamps from the British Empire.

"There are lots of interesting small countries. Some of them came out with stamps for only a short time," he says.

Coulson has issues of the first stamps — the Great Britain penny black and tupenny blue — dating from 1840. They aren't scarce but they are popular. So now they are worth up to $250 a copy, depending on their shape.

That's the other thing about stamp-collecting. If you know what you are doing, stamps can be an investment.

There has been a jump in value of about 50 per cent a year in some stamps.

A Great Britain souvenir sheet with four stamps on it was worth $1.85 when it was issued. Three months later it was worth $15.

A 50-cent Bluenose from the early 30s is now worth $300 to $400.

"It's like the stock market. It's a matter of taking your chances," says Thiel, "but you have to know what you're doing."

"There's a lot of speculation in stamps. It's forcing the prices of better stamps up. Canadian stamps prior to 1950 are appreciating due to the pressure of stamp investors."

Because of the escalating value of stamps, many collectors will not discuss their collections for fear of thieves.

One Victoria collector, who is reputed to have one of the best collections in the world, says he has had more than one mean experience when stories got in the paper.

It's not just investors and connoisseurs who collect stamps. Kids still do it too.

The Victoria Junior Stamp Club has 35 members and sometimes children have to wait up to a year to get in.

Club members, from seven to 14, go to meetings to learn about stamps, to trade, to play games and to get ready for competitions.

Lester Small, who runs the junior club, says the children earn money to keep their collections going by paper routes, baby-sitting, and gardening.

"If they want new stamps badly enough, they find a way to earn the money," says Small.

He has been collecting stamps for 28 years. He has one collection that tells the story of the Bible from the creation to the crucifixion and another that tells the story of how a pensioner can be a millionare — through collecting stamps.

PCL spokesman urges doubled bus terminal

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

Victoria needs a bus terminal building at least twice as big as the present structure, Pacific Coach Lines general manager Jack Thomas said today.

He said traffic on up-Island routes is up more than 14 per cent from last year and passenger totals are also increasing on the Victoria-Vancouver run.

"It's a tight fit at the present terminal and it will get worse as (bus) traffic increases."

PCL directors Thursday began the search for a new terminal site after being officially informed by Canadian Pacific that its lease on Empress land will not be renewed when it expires July 31, 1979.

Many directors first learned of the decision in a Times story Wednesday, Thomas said.

One site to be examined by the directors is the bus storage area behind the old Crystal Garden building but the space probably is not sufficient, Thomas said.

However a provincial government-owned parking lot beside the Executive House might be large enough.

Thomas said construction of a new terminal would begin soon after a site is obtained.

He said any new terminal should make provision for future needs and have a minimum of 14 bays, twice the number at the present site.

Victoria should also consider using the new terminal for city buses as well.

Thomas said Hydro buses currently wait at Douglas and Yates for extended periods and add to traffic congestion.

"It would be better for all concerned if they waited off the street in the terminal. The terminal would also be the ideal starting place for the free bus service."

Thomas said a downtown site is vital for the new transit centre but sufficient space was an equally-important consideration.

It would be more efficient to have all bus operations centred in one area, rather than have them scattered as they are at present.

The PCL board will be reporting to the provincial government on its findings regarding site considerations as quickly as possible, he said.

Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm has already contacted the board, asking for recommendations on developing a new terminal.

Meanwhile, the E & N Steering Committee, a group of United Transportation Union members campaigning to save the up-Island passenger service, has called a meeting for Sept. 12 in the provincial museum board room to discuss the possibility of incorporating a rail terminal in the new bus depot.

Chairman John Cooper, who agrees a downtown location would be best, said Victoria would be best served by a large terminal incorporating all forms of land transportation.

Cooper said the terminal should be as close as possible to the Inner Harbor, especially with the development of the convention centre there.

The present bus terminal is one block away. The two major downtown sites under consideration at the moment, behind the old Crystal Garden and beside the Executive House, are both two blocks away.

Electricians delay strike

City electricians today spread the word they are unlikely to begin strike action before Tuesday in order to avoid interfering with the Labor Day holiday.

They are in a legal position to strike at any time.

Jim Walker, president of the outside local of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, said the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers is concerned that large numbers of people might miss out on the Monday paid holiday if picket action begins this weekend.

CUPE has announced its members will honor all IBEW picket lines.

"They will give us advance warning before they set up a picket line and they have indicated they will not do anything before Tuesday," Walker said.

"They honored our picket line during our three-month strike and of course we will honor theirs."

CUPE Local 388, which represents civic inside workers, will also honor any IBEW picket line.

Of special concern is the Mann Cup lacrosse series, being played in Victoria for the first time in 22 years, starting Tuesday.

If a picket line goes up at Memorial Arena, it would be honored by CUPE operating engineers. It is not certain what the effects might be.

Royal Athletic Park could also be affected by picket activity.

Also on the target list are Victoria city hall, public works yards, garbage collection and Johnson St. bridge construction.

The IBEW has not indicated where it would begin strike activity.

The 15 IBEW union members look after street and traffic lights, maintain fire and police radio systems and coin-operated parking devices.

'Hit hard, hit fast' is B.C. forest fire policy

By AB KENT
Times Staff

In some parts of the U.S. the philosophy towards forest fires amounts to "let 'em burn".

But not in B.C.

Fighting all forest fires — at a cost so far this year of more than $16 million — is an official government policy that has both popular and political support.

The U.S. forest service believes in letting fires burn within specific limits laid down in a pre-determined formula.

American forestry officials divide timbered land into zones in which the assets and probabilities are balanced against the risks and until a fire reaches its specified limit for a zone, firefighters don't go into action.

But in B.C., foresters can't afford to wait for natural tree regeneration. The blanket policy here is to hit hard, hit fast.

There is also the danger to populated areas, power transmission lines, railways, fisheries, ecological reserves, recreational areas and industrial developments.

"I'm quite certain, nowadays, that cleansing fires would not be accepted politically or by the general public," says Don Owen, chief fire protection officer in B.C.

"You always run the risk of a fire blowing its stack and becoming a home-run fire."

Hence the B.C. policy of hitting quick, with the objective of controlling all wild fires by 10 a.m. the following day, before wind and other factors worsen.

The initial attack is successful in 86 per cent of all fires, while the remaining 14 per cent become big fires.

Thanks to today's technology, no part of the province is really inaccessible, Owen says.

There may be priorities involved, however and a fire in a tree plantation would be given precedence over a a fire on a remote mountaintop.

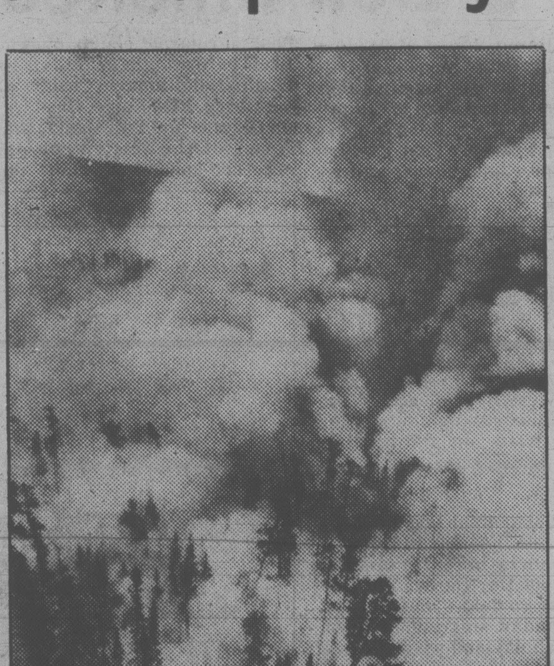
Preference also would be given to prime timber-growing land.

"I can't think of any areas on Vancouver Island where we could allow fire to ramble around," Owen said.

Besides the timber resource, planners have to consider aesthetics, fish and wildlife, water and soil erosion and many other factors.

This year to date there has been a significant increase in the number of fires — more than 2,200 compared to 3,271 in all of 1978 — but the area burned is less at about 50,000 acres.

Last year nearly 130,000 acres were lost in the whole season.



U.S. forest plan allows fires to burn within specific, pre-determined limits

Buyers beat beer hike

Sales of beer were heavy in Victoria Friday as customers stocked up before the price changed.

As soon as old stock was gone, Victoria stores began charging the new price of $5.20 a case, up 35 cents.

The new price went into effect on some brands today.

The price of draft beer will be up five cents a glass next week and bottled beer in pubs will go up 15 cents.

First brand to be sold out was Labatt's and the higher price was charged with the opening of some Victoria liquor stores this morning.

The price will hit $5.20 for all brands before the end of next week.

The provincial government will make an extra $5 million a year from the price boost.

Draft beer has been selling in the range of 40 to 50 cents but the new range will become 45 to 55 cents.

Only the B.C.-based Prince George Breweries is holding the line. A company spokesman said the brewery will hold prices down as long as possible.

Of the new 35-cent-increase on a dozen bottles, the breweries receive 22 cents. The remaining 13 cents — two cents more in sales tax and 11 cents in additional markup - goes to the government.

Police crash 2 parties

Six persons were carted off to jail after police broke up two noisy house parties in the city early today.

Two persons were taken into custody for breach of the peace and another was charged with obstructing police after officers shut down one of the parties at a house in the 1100-block North Park at 1:40 a.m. The party was attended by about 40 youths.

In the other, at a house in the 1700-block Adanac, police moved in at 3:40 a.m., ordered the 150 party-goers to leave and made three arrests.

Squatters blamed for fire

Squatters are blamed for a fire that destroyed an abandoned shack and damaged an old wharf at 1614 Store Street early today.

It took city firemen about an hour-and-a-half to extinguish the blaze which was reported at 4:08 a.m.

No one was injured.

A fire department spokesman described the loss as negligible.

Artist's bird works draw raves

LANSDOWNE

Terrific, excellent, superb.

Those were only a few of the superlatives used by guests Friday at the opening of the first major exhibition of works by Victoria's internationally-known bird artist, Fenwick Lansdowne.

The exhibition, at the provincial museum, will run for a month.

On display are 41 original paintings used to illustrate the book Rails of the World — a family of birds which include coots and gallinules.

It took Lansdowne 13 years to complete the paintings for the book written by S. Dillon Ripley, secretary of the Smithsonian Institution.

Lansdowne who was committed to other projects during those years, admits it kept him busy.

"I thought it would never end." he said.

Lansdowne first studies his subjects in the field if this is possible. He then goes through collections of bird skins to get the detail and color. He paints with gouache, a type of watercolor and usually uses heavy watercolor paper.

Lansdowne is presently working to complete paintings for volume two of his Birds of the West Coast, to be published in April of next year.

Lansdowne's career started when he was 14. Without any formal training and little instruction, he started drawing birds. His work soon attracted the provincial museum which sponsored the first showing of his work.

At the age of 23, he won the acclaim of critics as one of the world's leading painters of birds following two exhibitions in London and New York.

Irish to use Hayes, Wilson in final

By BILL WALKER

Victoria Shamrocks and Peterborough Red Oaks each will be allowed two additional players for the Mann Cup national senior lacrosse championships series opening at Memorial Arena Tuesday night, general manaager Leon Hall of the Shamrocks has announced.

"They (Peterborough) have requested two senior players," said Hall, "primarily because their juniors will not be available." The Peterborough junior team is engaged in the Minto Cup junior playoff in Calgary at the same time as the Mann Cup series.

"In return we will be allowed two players."

The Shamrocks have selected Doug Hayes of Vancouver Burrards and Dan Wilson of Coquitlam Adanacs as their first two choices. Hayes has said he will come while indications are that Wilson will also accept the invitation.

New Westminster's veteran Wayne Goss is the other player being considered by the Shamrocks.

The arrangement was negotiated between Western Lacrosse Association commissioner Wally Donaldson and the Peterborough club this week.

Hayes was the second leading scorer in the WLA this season behind Brian Evans of Nanaimo (57-88—145). He had a league high of 62 goals and 60 assists for 122 points.

Wilson, in his rookie year, was third with 53 goals and 68 assists for 121 points, a record for a rookie. Wilson played a similar role in 1976 when he aided Victoria McDonalds to the Minto Cup junior championship.

Each team will be allowed to name 21 players, Hall said. The only doubful starter among the Shamrock regulars is Steve Buckley, who has an injured knee.

Shamrocks will be trying to prevent Peterborough from becoming the first Eastern Canadian team to win the best-of-seven Mann Cup series in the West.

The Peterborough contingent, including about 30 fans, will arrive Monday afternoon. Their headquarters will be the Imperial Inn. Tickets for the series will be on sale at Memorial Arena Monday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Other games are scheduled Wednesday, Friday and Saturday of next week and Sept. 10, 12 and 13, if necessary.

Peterborough is described as a new-look team and the subject of great expectations in the East.

The Red Oaks have eight new faces in the lineup from the team that won the championship last year in seven games.

Goaltender Tim Barrie, voted Most Valuable Player of the 1978 series, says Peterborough was the underdog then.

But this year "everyone expects us to do a lot," Barrie says, and he feels more pressure on the Red Oaks to repeat as national champs. Barrie played for Nanaimo Timbermen a few years ago.

The eight newcomers who helped the Red Oaks retain their Ontario Lacrosse Association championship this season are John Grant, Gord Floyd, Mike Collins, Ron Ryan, Steve Plunkett and three rookies — Jan Magee, Les Teatro and Tim Hargraves.

Along with goaltender Barrie, the other Red Oaks returning are captain Jim Wasson, who is going into his third Mann Cup, veteran Larry Ferguson, playing in his eighth, Pete Guerin, Tom Parnell, Jimmy Johnston, Bob Wasson, Scott MacLean and J. J. Johnston. The Wasson brothers also played with Nanaimo in the WLA.

J. J. Johnston, who played with New Westminster in 1976, led all scorers in the four-team OLA this season with 58 goals and 66 assists in 24 games.

The Red Oaks captured first place in the OLA with 16 wins, six losses and two ties.

They also scored the most goals, 389, and allowed the fewest, 269.

The Red Oaks advanced to the Mann Cup by defeating Brampton in the best-of-seven Eastern Canada final four games to one.

Gone from last year's champs are Larry Floyd and Brian and Gerrard Cowie, players still of junior age who will be playing for Peterborough Centurions in the Minto Cup championship. Also not listed with the Peterborough team is Paul Evans who led all scorers in last year's final. It is believed he has been suspended.

Konopacki's no-hitter places Budgets on top

ST. JOHN's, Nfld. — Victoria Budgets opened the playoff round of the Canadian senior men's fastball championships this morning, still undefeated and with two chances of survival in preliminary playoff action.

Budgets defeated Placentia Pioneers of Newfoundland 1-0 Friday in the final game of their round-robin divisional play for their fourth straight victory and first place overall in the 13-team tournament.

Budgets tied with undefeated Ontario, 4-0, for first place, but Victoria took the honors because of a superior runs-for-and-against record.

The eight top teams qualified for the playoff preliminaries with the top four — Budgets, Ontario, St. John's and Manitoba — allowed two losses and the other four clubs — Alberta, New Brunswick, Quebec and either Placentia of Newfoundland or Saskatchewan — allowed only one loss. PLacentia and Saskatchewan were engaged in a special playoff for the eighth position this morning.

Budgets were scheduled against St. John's this morning with another game scheduled for later in the day.

Remaining games were to be determined after the elimination round.

Andy Konopacki threw a no-hitter and Bob Walton hit a sixth-inning home run to provide Budgets with their victory Friday.

It was the second consecutive no-hitter by a Budget pitcher, Dave Wilson having accomplished the feat against New Brunswick Thursday.

Konpacki struck out 10 including seven of the last nine batters he faced. He walked one.

Budgets only got two hits from Pat Kelly of Newfoundland. The other blow was a double by Dennis Eckert.

Pitchers have dominated the four-day tournament. Of the twenty-six games played four have been no-hitters while another 14 were shutouts.

Dennis Amell allowed just one hit as Ontario beat Alberta 2-0. Jim Haley had a two-hitter in a losing cause.

Final game is scheduled Sunday morning, but it could be delayed, depending on the weather.

Tennis' baby girls 'all over the place'

NEW YORK (AP) — Even Ilie Nastase, the flamboyant Romanian, can't get away from the new crop of tennis tykes.

"Wherever you go in the players' lounge, you step on a baby girl," the 33-year-old Nastase joked. "One is over there crying, one is over there giggling, one is over there taking a nap. They are all over the place."

On Friday, this younger generation took over the stadium court at the U.S. Open tennis championships, with 16-year-old Tracy Austin defeating 14-year-old Andrea Jaeger 6-2, 6-2, in a battle of pint-sized blondes with bouncing pigtails.

"I've been playing these older women for a year now, so I wasn't really that nervous," Jaeger said of her big-time debut.

Upon hearing herself described as an "older woman," Austin burst into laughter. "Older women?" she asked.

"Excuse me!"

In today's featured matches, top-seeded Bjorn Borg of Sweden plays Jaime Fillol of Chile, No. 4 Vitas Gerluaitis takes on Stan Smith and No. 6 Guillermo Vilas of Argentina faces Erik Van Dillen.

Among the women, No. 4 Virginia Wade of Britain opposes Diane Morrison and No. 9 Billie Jean King plays Stacy Margolin. Tonight, second-seeded Martina Navratilova faces Caroline Stoll.

Jaeger is 2½ months older than Kathy Horvath, who earlier this week became the youngest player ever to compete in the main draw of the Open (14 years, 5 days), and 5½ months younger than Austin when she played in the 1977 Open.

Jaeger was asked what the reaction to her Open appearance would be when she returned to school.

"A couple of kids will say, 'Wow, you played Tracy Austin! Can I have your autograph?'" she said. "Others will ask if I met any cute guys."

Nearly all the seeded players, led by defending champion Jimmy Connors, continued their march into the third round with victories Friday, a day that saw no repeat of the rowdy crowd behavior that marred Thursday's match between Nastase and John McEnroe.

Connors, rated No. 2 behind Wimbledon champion Bjorn Borg, beat India's Vijay Amritraj 7-6, 7-5, retired. Amritraj gave up when he suffered cramps in his thumb.

Fifth-ranked Roscoe Tanner downed Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia 6-3, 6-2, 6-1.

O'Dell finishes third

Jimmy Insolo of Mission Hills, Calif., made up a deficit of one-half lap after a pit stop for new tires to capture a 100-lap NASCAR West stock car race Friday in Spokane, edging hometown driver Kirk Rogers.

Rick O'Dell of Victoria took the lead briefly when Insolo stopped for new tires on the 78th lap, but O'Dell finished third after he also had to make a tire change. Jackie Kuper of Roy, Wash., was fourth and Roy Smith of Victoria fifth.

Western point leader Tim Williamson spun out on the first lap, and finished seventh.

In Winnipeg, defending champion British Columbia crushed Manitoba 8-1 in the second day of round-robin competition at the Canadian men's field hockey championships. B.C. is now 2-0. Quebec and Ontario also are undefeated,

In Cleveland, defending champion John Cook survived a dramatic 26-hole, third-round match, then soared to a one-sided quarter-final victory in the 79th U.S. Amateur golf championship. A six-foot birdie putt on the eighth extra hole enabled Cook to beat Lennie Clements.

The National Hockey League has reached a settlement on contract claims by former Birmingham Bulls players Rob Ramage, Craig Hartsburg, Rick Vaive, Gaston Gingras and Pat Riggin. Terms of the settlement were not announced but it was reported that the four expansion teams — Winnipeg Jets, Quebec Nordiques, Edmonton Oilers and Hartford Whalers — would pay most of a $500,000 settlement.

FIRED Friday as manager of the Philadelphia Phillies of the National Baseball League was Danny Ozark. Phillies are in fifth place in the National League East. Ozark was replaced by Dallas Green, director of minor leagues and scouting for the Phils.

Scott's blow snaps Reds' victory streak

Times News Services

Rodney Scott, missing from the starting lineup because of a cold bug making the rounds of the Expos clubhouse, slapped a run-scoring single in the 10th inning Friday night to lift Montreal to an 8-7 victory over Cincinnati at Montreal, snapping an eight-game National League baseball winning streak by the Reds.

"It's a good come-from-behind win — all the way," said Expos manager Dick Williams, whose second-place club remained three games behind Pittsburgh Pirates in the East Division.

"We didn't quit. We battled back. That was a very big one for us. We gave them quite a few runs and still came back to win."

Andre Dawson drove in four runs with a fielder's choice, a two-run home run and a triple to account for half the Expos' runs.

Keith Hernandez doubled home Jerry Mumphrey with one out in the 15th inning to give St. Louis Cardinals an 8-7 victory over San Diego Padres while Los Angeles blasted four home runs, two by Derrel Thomas, as the Dodgers defeated Chicago Cubs 6-4.

Relief pitcher Enrique Romo snuffed out a San Francisco rally in the sixth inning by retiring pinch-hitter Willie McCovey with two runners on base, saving the victory for starter Don Robinson as Pittsburgh Pirates beat the Giants 6-4.

In the American League, reports of the California Angels' demise have been greatly exaggerated.

Not only aren't the Angels dead, but they're back in first place in the American League West after surrendering the top spot for one day to Kansas City Royals.

It wasn't easy. The Angels, who had dropped five games in a row, had to overcome a 4-0 deficit and then blew an 8-4 lead before edging Cleveland Indians 9-8 on Brian Downing's run-scoring single in the ninth inning.

That vaulted them back atop the West Division by a half-game over the Royals, who lost to New York Yankees 7-3.

Suddenly, they all love Calgary

By JIM CRERAR
Times Staff

Calgary Dinosaurs have given their championship hopes a major boost in the Canada West University Athletic Association men's basketball league this season and raised a few eyebrows in the process.

Coach Gary Howard's Dinosaurs have landed national team forward Romel Raffin for the coming season.

Joining Raffin will be three other Dino newcomers, all with first-string potential. They are forwards Steve Atkin from Simon Fraser University and Bart DeNooy from Dawson College in Montreal (both 6'9''), along with Winnipeg guard Bill Durnim.

Raffin, 25, a 6-9 forward from Kitchener, Ont., played three seasons of NCAA basketball for Pennsylvania, then played last winter in Italy. A member of Canada's 1976 Olympic team, Raffin has again been selected by national coach Jack Donohue to play in the Olympics next summer in Moscow.

UVic Viking coach Ken Shields can't help wondering if Calgary violated a Canada West rule that prohibits recruiting beyond a university's provincial boundaries.

''It's amazing how all those fine young athletes all of a sudden want to attend the University of Calgary,'' Shields said Friday. ''And all of their own volition?''

He'll never know.

Howard, already on record as opposing the recruiting boundary rule, can argue that he has violated no laws nor even broken any gentelmanly agreements.

Raffin reportedly wanted to come back to Canada and you can hardly blame Donohue for wanting him to play at a school with a good competitive program. In any case, there's no way of knowing how much influence, if any, Donohue had on Raffin's choice.

Regardless, Shields isn't conceding the Canada West championship Vikings won last year. UVic, Calgary and Alberta Golden Bears were the preseason favorites before the Dinos landed Raffin and the others and that hasn't changed.

Alberta's biggest gain this year is coach Brian Heaney, who turned St. Mary's Huskies of Halifax into a national powerhouse before moving to Edmonton this year.

UVic has lost all-star guard Robbie Parris through graduation — and he'll be missed — but Shields has a first-class candidate to fill his shoes in Ilario Pasquale.

High school basketball fans may recall Pasquale as the standout player from Lockerby high school in Sudbury during last winter's Oak Leaf Classic tournament at Oak Bay High.

Shields also can count on the return of forward Billy Loos, league scoring champion two years ago who sat out last season.

There's no question that Vikings will be a power again, so why is Shields complaining about Calgary's sudden good fortune?

The bottom line in the issue here is an old one — ethics. For years Canadian universities have relied on the honor system not to entice a player with money or employ unethical recruiting practices. The policy has been one of hands off; let the player choose his own school free of the pressure of enticements.

Certainly it's a worthy philosophy, but at no point in the history of college sports in Canada has anyone been able to honestly say it works.

There has always been the underlying suspicion that one school or another — not many, to be sure — occasionally breaks the unwritten rules. Why not put them in writing, then?

Because, as those same coaches and athletic directors have been saying ad nauseum, you can't legislate morals.

Of course you cant. What isn't ehtical to one school or coach may be perfectly ethical to another.

The point in this case is that the Canada West conference has, during its short history, been fortunate in that its member schools have operated with pretty much the same perception of right and wrong. Now along comes a school — Calgary — whose perception of what is ethical may vary from that held by UVic or UBC or Lethbridge.

Does that make Calgary wrong? Who can judge?

Cosmos plan court case

Times News Services

The North American Soccer League suspended Carlos Alberto, star sweeper of New York Cosmos, on Friday and the defending champions responded by saying they will sue the NASL and commissioner Phil Woosnam.

Alberto was suspended for the remainder of the playoffs as a result of ''violent and abusive conduct towards game officials last Wednesday night in Vancouver,'' where the Whitecaps beat the Cosmos 2-0 in the first game of the National Conference finals.

The two teams met today at Giants Stadium in East Rutherford, N.J. and the Cosmos had to win the regularly scheduled game and a 30-minute mini-game to advance to the Soccer Bowl.

Alberto was suspended ''because he threw his shirt at, verbally abused and spat upon game officials after exiting the field of play,'' the NASL said. Alberto, a Brazilian, also was fined.

When notified of the suspension, the Cosmos said they ''are filing a lawsuit against Phil Woosnam and the NASL for suspending Alberto without due process.

The commissioner's decision was made before the written report of the game officials was filed with the league and without any opportunity for Alberto or the Cosmos to present their position.''

Also suspended for today's game was Eskandarian, an Iranian defender. He was issued a red card with eight seconds remaining Wednesday for a vicious tackle on Kevin Hector.

Meanwhile, first-year coach Alan Hinton was fired Friday by Tulsa Roughnecks of the North American Soccer League and Charlie Mitchell, a Toronto Blizzard assistant coach, was named to succeed him.

Tom Keeter, managing general partner of the club, confirmed the dismissal of Hinton.

Hudon sets pace for sulky honors

By BILL WALKER
Times Staff

With five days of racing remaining, including today, two interesting races have developed at Sandown Harness Raceway.

Both concern Joe Hudon and Keith Linton, the top two drivers of the meeting and usually the top pair wherever they meet.

And they are at it again this meeting in the leading driver competition and the most popular driver poll, but with some noteworthy changes from just a few days ago.

Hudon, who had edged ahead in the most popular driver vote by fans during the past few days, Friday night made it a double as he jumped ahead in the driver race with his second four-win peformance of the week.

He had won four races on Monday. Linton, meanwhile, has been winless this week.

Hudon started his show with Andys Wayne in the second ($8.20). He then scored with Holridge Bob ($8.70) in the fourth, Holridge Bryan ($5.70) in the fifth and Cut The Deck ($15.20) in the sixth.

He was second with Shoot The Works in the first and unplaced with Antique Adios in the eighth.

For Cut The Deck, which had started the meeting here by running in $2,500 company, it was a best-ever mile in 2:04 3/5 as the favored Able Majesty ran second.

Hudon's work for the night gave him a Universal Driving Rating percentage of .412, 10 points ahead of Linton.

Linton was fourth twice and fifth in his other drive.

When a fan on the rail yelled ''way to go, Joe,'' after his fourth win, Joe replied simply, as he drove by: ''You gotta get 'em when you can.''

And that's the story between this pair. They are that close and a big day for Linton could switch things around just as quickly.

But, with only a week remaining, it makes for an interesting test and virtually a head-to-head match-up.

Meanwhile, Hudon's performance took the limelight away from another fine evening's work, all with an Irish flavor.

Owner-trainer-driver Leonard Hill also had a big night with three winners. He scored with Irish Ojetsol ($13.00) in the third, Irish Splendor ($4.60) in the feature and Irish Flame ($9.90) in the eighth.

Irish Splendor actually finished second in the feature but was moved up when first-place finisher Delta Duke, driven by Phil Coleman, was disqualified and placed sixth for interference against Quel Dale. (Results, Monday's entries on 20).

National's postage-stamp greens shake golf visitors

WOODBRIDGE, Ont. (CP) — ''I'm just happy I didn't break a leg out there,'' said Lee Trevino.

''It can jump up and grab you real quick,'' said defending champion Lanny Wadkins.

They were commenting on the 6,975-yard National Golf Club course — a demanding layout that has plagued most of the competitors in the $100,000 Labatt's International tournament.

Only Peter Townsend of England, a member of the Professional Golfers' Association tour in the United States for three years, had kind words about the course, which features small greens that have been shaking up most of the players in the 72-hole tournament.

The veteran led after 36 holes with a 140 total, two under par, and three better than first-round leader Lee Trevino, Dave Barr of Kelowna, Bob Rose of Hamilton and England's Tony Jacklin.

''It was perfect today,'' said the 32-year-old Townsend, who won the Colombian, Zambian, Moroccan and Barranquilla Opens in 1978.

Trevino, with a 67 Thursday in the quest for the first prize of $20,000, had all sorts of trouble in the second round and finished at five-over 76.

Trevino called the National ''one of the toughest courses I have ever played . . . and I've played a lot of golf courses.''

A sports letter

Following is a copy of letters sent to Jake Gaudaur, Commissioner, Canadian Football League, and Bob Ackles, General Manager, B.C. Lions, on the subject of televised football coverage in the Victoria area:

We, on Vancouver Island, are being discriminated against when football games are blacked out on television from the Island any time that B.C. Lions are playing at home. Not only is the Vancouver game blacked out but also the television feed from other league cities.

Island residents cannot attend the Vancouver games in person without incurring an overnight hotel bill since the last ferry leaves Vancouver at 10 p.m. and the last flight at 10:55.

On August 28, the Vancouver game was sold out with over 30,000 people attending. Still, the game was blacked out. It is argued that last-minute TV coverage cannot be arranged. This argument is negated by the fact that the (Whitecaps) soccer game from Vancouver on August 29 was released on TV to the Island and the decision to do so was not made until it was established the day before that it would be a sellout.

B.C. Lions may badly need a new stadium but first it needs to improve its image through better public relations, and to deny TV coverage from those who cannot attend the games is not the way to improve that image. The team under Coach Rapp is doing well; management should try to do likewise.

"YOU'LL NEVER WAX YOUR CAR AGAIN"
PERMA-SHINE
WE GUARANTEE IT IN WRITING!
1. The Perma-Shine process is a once only treatment and offers a written guarantee that, for as long as you own the vehicle, it will not fade, oxidize, change color and will never need waxing.
2. Protects from the effect of rain, salt, snow and sun.
3. Save time washing your car as dirt will not adhere as well.
4. If your car is dull and has lost its lustre, in most cases Perma-Shine can bring it back to a showroom shine.
5. New cars will have a better than showroom shine.
Stop by today or call for your appointment.

City scullers in semis

BLED, Yugoslavia (Reuter) — Three more Canadian boats advanced to the semifinals in men's lightweight and women's events at the world rowing championships Friday.

Friday's repechages — second-chance heats — saw the Canadian men's lightweight four without cox qualify for today's semifinals with a third-place finish behind Italy and Yugoslavia. There were only three boats in the repechage for that event.

Also advancing were Janice Mason and Lisa Roy of Victoria, in the women's double sculls, and Andrea Schreiner of St. Catharines, Ont., in the single sculls.

The men's lightweight four of Bill and Jim Earle of Brockville, Ont., and Jim Smith and Dan Charlton of Ottawa recorded a time of 6:42.34 in their repechage. The Italian boat was timed in 6:37.18 and the Yugoslavians in 6:42.0.

Schreiner placed third in her single sculls repechage behind Anna Kondrachina of the Soviet Union who clocked 3:41.85 with Hette Brrias of the Netherlands second in 3:42.17. Schreiner was timed in 3:42.51.

Mason and Roy clocked 3:32.84 in their double sculls event, placing second behind Petra Lohr and Doris Dannenberg of West Germany who were timed in 3:30.61.

Gibson three shots behind golf leader

WINNIPEG (CP) Somebody up there must like Winnipeg's Rob Tod.

After struggling through the third round of the Canadian junior men's golf championship Friday, the second-round leader thought he had no chance of winning.

Instead, his mediocre score of 78, six over par, allowed him to pick up a stroke on second-place Rick Sepp of Mt. Hope, Ont.

Tod started today's final round with a 54-hole total of 223, seven over par, while Sepp, who shot 79, was at 225. Tod had been ahead by one stroke after 36 holes.

Rick Gibson, a former Victorian now living in Vancouver, fired a 77 and was three strokes behind the leader at 226. Dan Mijovic of Unionville, Ont., and Keith Westover of Vancouver both were at 227.

In the juvenile competition, Rick Catonio of Edmonton fired 75 to catch Chris Dockrill of Dartmouth, N.S., the leader for the first two days. Both had 229, 13 over par, going into today's round.

Eighty made Thursday's cut to earn the dubious privilege of continuing to battle the treacherous wind at Breezy Bend Country Club.

Tod, 17, was surprised to learn he still held the lead. He said he went into the round aiming for a 75 to stay close. Instead, he says, he played "just terrible."

Tapie inherits lead as Strange falters

ENDICOTT, N.Y. (AP) — Allan Tapie took a one-stroke lead over the defending champion, Gil Morgan, and Larry Webb, a burly long-ball hitter who is struggling to stay on the pro tour, into today's third round of the $275,000 B.C. Open golf tournament.

Tapie grabbed the lead Friday with a four-under-par 67 to go with Thursday's 65, leaving him 10 under par midway through the 72-hole Professional Golfers' Association tournament.

"Right now I just want to get as far out as I can," said Tapie, a 30-year-old pro from California.

Tapie started the second round trailing Curtis Strange by one stroke. Strange, the 1974 U.S. collegiate champion, was the first-round leader with a 64, but ballooned to a 73 Friday that put him five strokes off the lead.

Webb has been putting his 263-pound frame behind long drives to pull into contention for his first tour victory. Webb, who has earned only $5,097 since joining the PGA tour in 1977, has already lost his original sponsors and lost his tour card once.

He has won only $4,904 so far, his best paycheque this year being $755 for finishing 44th at the Doral Open. He needs to win at least $12,000 to retain his Approved Players Card.

Victory in the B.C. Open is worth $49,500.

"I'd play for free if I could play in front of the crowds — that's what I'm here for," said Webb, an Aurora, Colo., native who shot a 67 to go with his opening-round 66.

Ho hum day for Pat

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — Defending champion Pat Bradley said it was just another working day, but the other co-leaders after the first round of the $100,000 Rail Charity Classic on the Ladies' Professional Golf Association tour were a bit more excited.

Bradley, veteran Shelley Hamlin and newcomer Janet Alex tied at 67 Friday, five under par. They were among 23 golfers who broke par on the 6,850-yard Rail course.

"It was a day of work; I did my job," said Bradley after making five birdie putts on the front nine.

Hamlin, 32nd on the money-winning list, was three under par after nine holes and added two birdies on the back nine and liked the way she played: "Even my misses were good."

Cathy Sherk of Port Colborne, Ont., was six shots off the pace at 73 with nines of 38 and 35, Jocelyne Bourassa of Shawinigan, Que., was at 76 and Dale Shaw of Victoria carded an 81.

Blind staff pickets CNIB shop

Nine of workshop's staff of 20 were on picket line Friday

EDMONTON (CP) — Blind workers at a sheltered workshop run by the Canadian National Institute for the Blind took to the picket lines Friday to protest against what they consider dangerous working conditions and "starvation wages."

The city workshop is designed to train blind persons for jobs in industry but picketers said in reality the CNIB is exploiting them as a cheap labor source, making few attempts to find them outside jobs.

They say workshop staff earn between 40 cents and $3.70 an hour.

Shortly after the walkout began, the CNIB suspended assistant workshop supervisor Dave Knights, who is sighted.

The picketers said they would not return to their jobs until Knights is reinstated and their demands for more money and better benefits are met.

CNIB district administrator Paul Newman said he is "the first to admit" that some of the workers' complaints are valid, but he said the CNIB is working hard to change things.

Some 20 employees at the workshop make wooden surveyor stakes, gaskets and other equipment on a contract basis with other industries.

Newman said the CNIB hopes to have the basement workshop moved to larger quarters by the end of September. Meanwhile, one provincial safety inspector termed current conditions there "dangerous," with overcrowding the main hazard.

Jet sale ups PWA profit

CALGARY (CP) — The sale of a Boeing 707 by Pacific Western Airlines pushed mid-year profits to the highest level in years for the Alberta government-owned company.

The jet was sold in May when PWA ended its overseas charters and the company realized a gain of $3.4 million.

The unaudited statement for the period ending June 30 says PWA and its subsidiary companies recorded earnings of $5.4 million on revenues of $97.9 million compared with earnings of $745,000 on $76.3 milllion in the same period a year ago.

PWA and subsidiary Transair Ltd. carried 1,567,930 passengers on scheduled services during the six months, up 38 per cent from 1978.

Flight-inspect crisis brews

OTTAWA (CP) — A crisis is developing among the country's 370 flight inspectors, says a report prepared for the federal government.

The inspectors are upset about the proliferation of impractical regulations they must enforce and dispirited because their work is held in such low regard by the rest of the aviation community, says the 93-page study released Friday by Transport Minister Don Mazankowski.

The report, written by a private management firm, was commissioned 16 months ago by the transport department.

It urges the government to improve training procedures for inspectors and tighten enforcement of air safety regulations as a first step to restoring the morale of this group.

Inspectors are responsible for the issuing of licences and the policing of aeronautical regulations to ensure the safety of air travellers.

"The aircraft operations occupational group (which includes the inspectors and a small number of helicopter pilots and airline pilots who fly the prime minister and other cabinet ministers on government business) is near the brink of a crisis," says the report.

"A number of circumstances have led the inspectors to believe that their role is not valued . . . and they are losing, or have lost the esteem of the civil aviation community.

The report offers 56 recommendations which its authors believe capable of revitalizing the inspection system and reviving the spirits of its staff.

—Identify exactly which regulations can and should be enforced and provide training to make sure the inspectors know techniques and procedures available to do this job.

— Announce an immediate freeze on hiring for headquarters postings (in Ottawa) and and fill all vacancies by sending new staff to regional offices.

— Develop a training program which would allow inspectors to become generalists with a working knowledge of all areas of work, instead of one specialized field of expertise. A job rotation program could then be put into place to relieve worker boredom.

— Ensure civil inspectors and pilots the same starting salaries as their military counterparts.

— Give inspectors more private offices so they can get away from the pressure and noise of their field duties.

Sysco to lay off 800

SYDNEY, N.S (CP) — Eight hundred jobs will be lost at the Sydney Steel Corp. plant as the troubled cornerstone industry of Cape Breton withers in the face of mounting debt.

Roland Thornhill, Nova Scotia development minister, emerged from a meeting with the board of directors of the provincial Crown agency that runs the mill, to announce that one of two blast furnaces is being shut down, resulting in layoffs for about one-quarter of the plant's workforce.

Most of the layoffs will take effect by Nov. 1, Thornhill said.

Sysco was created to operate the plant after private interests condemned it to closure in 1967.

He said the plant has been losing $5 million a month and he hopes the partial shutdown will spur the federal government to step in with financial aid.

Thornhill estimated Sysco's recent debt at $300 million. Another $200 million would be needed to modernize the plant.

Go-North tax incentives urged

OTTAWA (CP) — Tax breaks to attract a stable work force in the North have been recommended in a federal report on mining strategies in the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

Made public Friday, the report said the federal and territorial governments should consider introducing a tax-free allowance of up to $8,000 a year for northern residents.

Preferential income tax systems are used to attract people to isolated regions of Greenland and Australia.

The report said tax-free benefits and subsidies provided by many northern employers have been "an important incentive in helping to attract and maintain employees in the North, as well as helping to offset the higher social and economic costs of living there."

Subsidized employees receive between $4,500 and $12,000 a year for shelter, power, oil, airfare and territorial taxes. The $8,000 allowance would ensure that these benefits could remain tax-free, the report said.

"It would also provide substantial relief to non-subsidized taxpayers living and working in the territories."

The report said the allowance should be indexed at the same rate as personal income tax exemptions and any taxpayer who lived in the North for 18 months would be eligible for the full taxation exemption.

The committee said several other taxation and administration initiatives were needed to encourage exploration, development and mining in the two regions.

"The remoteness, the vastness and climatic conditions of the region create great difficulties in transportation, power supply and in the availability and mobility of the work force."

Transportation and other services were unable to meet even present needs, but the North was a storehouse of lead, zinc and other minerals "which economies around the world will need in the 1980s."

Bell offers 36.% over 3

MONTREAL (CP) — The labor scene cooled in Eastern Canada Friday with developments in labor disputes involving Bell Canada and Alcan Aluminum Ltd..

Some 15,000 striking technicians at Bell Canada have begun scheduling membership meetings for next week to approve a new contract providing increases of about 36.1 per cent over three years.

Officials of the Communications Workers of Canada said that if the new terms are approved by the end of the week, the technicians and installers could be back to work Sept. 10.

Meanwhile, Alcan workers at three Quebec smelter plants crippled for three months over a labor dispute, will return to work next week following ratification by both sides on a new three-year contract.

The company accepted the recommendations by two provincial mediators Friday, three days after the overwhelming approval of the 7,000 smelter workers, who are represented by the Federation des Syndicats du Secteurs Aluminium.

Pension inquiry near

OTTAWA (CP) — A parliamentary inquiry will soon look into Canadian pension plans, says Heward Grafftey, minister of state responsible for social programs.

Grafftey said Friday he wants to introduce a pension regulation amendment to permit the widow of a pensioner to receive a full pension even if she hasn't reached retirement age.

Grafftey's other major project for the new session of Parliament, which opens Oct. 9, is the establishment of an accident prevention centre. He did not elaborate.

UIC payout down by 8%

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government paid out eight per cent less in unemployment insurance benefits during the first half of this year than in the same period in 1978.

Government figures released Friday showed $2.46 billion was paid in unemployment insurance for the period ending June 30. During the first half of 1978, the total paid was $2.69 billion.

Total claims dropped to 1,257 from 1,341.

'Bus lobby sets train fares'

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Canadian bus companies have used Transport Canada to protect their profits by keeping train fares higher than bus fares, a New Democratic Party MP from Saskatchewan said Friday. The bus industry rejected the charges.

Les Benjamin (Regina West) told reporters at a press conference that confidential documents submitted last month to Transport Minister Don Mazankowski show lobbyists for the bus industry were instrumental in previous government decisions to raise rail fares.

If the government acts on advice contained in these documents, further fare increases will be pushed through to make sure train travel remains uneconomical, the NDP transport critic said.

The executive director of the Canadian Motor Coach Association rejected Benjamin's charges.

"We were never in collusion with the government over the fares but we made sure the government know our views," said Yves Dagenais.

Mazankowski told reporters he had never seen the documents, but he was familiar with Benjamin's accusations.

This is not the first time the Regina MP has made such charges, he said.

Benjamin did not know whether the collusion he was alleging between the bus industry and the department of transport involved officials from the minister's staff or merely lower level bureaucrats.

He said the government appears determined to run trains that are so old, slow, expensive and dirty that no one will ride them.

He distributed copies of a 58-page discussion paper on VIA Rail Canada, the Crown corporation which has a monopoly on transcontinental rail travel. Benjamin said the report had been prepared for cabinet by federal transport officials.

It said: "VIA's withdrawal of service would improve the financial viability of bus services by making more passengers available."

Benjamin gave reporters a second document, entitled draft annual report to cabinet (concerning VIA Rail Canada), which said: "Future involvement by the (federal government) rail passenger branch will be to ensure that bus industry complaints are taken into consideration when determining future fare policy. The bus industry has increased lobby presence by establishing a permanent representative in Ottawa to ensure its position receives the necessary visiblity."

Benjamin, a long-time crusader for a revitalized rail system, has been an MP for 11 years.

"There is an outrageous bias at the ministry of transport against rail transportation service in Canada," he said.

Benjamin said he had no specific grounds on which to criticize the three-month-old Conservative government's attitude toward rail travel, but added: "I haven't noticed any change in policy or personnel at the ministry."

He said he is calling on Mazankowski to declare a complete reversal of his department's demonstrated bias against rail travel.

Travellers are just beginning to find rail service attractive after a long period of unpopularity, and the government should respond to this increase in public interest, Benjamin said.

New Quebec forestry map redraws Labrador border

TORONTO (CP) — The Globe and Mail says a new Quebec government map — apparently put out with ministerial authorization — redraws the boundary between Quebec and Labrador which has been a matter of dispute between Quebec and Newfoundland for years.

The Toronto newspaper in a Montreal story says the map, issued by the Quebec lands and forests department Aug. 15, shows the boundary set by the Imperial Privy Council in London in 1927, when Labrador was given to Newfoundland.

It also shows a second jagged boundary north of the 52nd parallel — which the Privy Council had set as Labrador's southern limits — placing the headwaters of rivers that flow into the Gulf of St. Lawrence inside Quebec.

The Globe and Mail story says the marking of the borders apparently cedes the rest of Labrador to Newfoundland. It notes that Quebec has never accepted the 1927 ruling, and says previous maps issued by Quebec have shown Labrador as part of Quebec or used a third color different from those used for Quebec and Newfoundland.

Oil bin plans killed

WASHINGTON (CP) — A U.S. government decision to cancel private bids for storing strategic oil reserves apparently spells the end of two Canadian proposals for storage centres in eastern Canada, an energy department spokesman said Friday.

U.S. energy officials said the interruption of Iranian oil shipments to the United States late last year resulted in such a sharp rise in world oil prices that the U.S. build-up of its strategic reserves must be delayed.

Two Canadian companies, Home Oil Ltd. of Calgary and Wabanex Ltd. of Montreal, had made proposals to the U.S. government for storing the U.S. reserves. One called for a storage site at the Cape Breton salt domes, near the Strait of Canso, and the other was at the abandoned Wabanex iron mines in Bell Island, Nfld.

Home Oil, which was to be in partnership with Gulf Oil Co. Ltd. in the proposed development, said it was shelving its plans to develop an underground oil-storage depot near Post Hawkesbury, N.S., as a result of the U.S. decision.

The energy department said that while it won't consider private storage proposals at this time, it may at some time in the future request proposals again.

Trudeau mounts attack

OTTAWA (CP) — Opposition Leader Pierre Trudeau denounced the government's decision to abandon the federal referendum bill Friday as "irresponsible and careless."

Prime Minister Clark said Thursday the proposed referendum would not be needed because Quebecers would vote against separatism.

In a press release, Trudeau said "I am convinced that all Canadians have the right to be heard when the unity of their country is at stake."

"In my opinion," Trudeau said, "the federal government not only has the right but the responsibility to establish the same channel through which all Canadians . . . can be heard."

B.C. model in hooker raps

CALGARY (CP) — The city police force has laid prostitution charges against 61 women under a new approach based on a Supreme Court of Canada ruling in Vancouver.

Inspector Ray Palardy said Friday police took the approach that soliciting by a prostitute of more than one man met the requirements of being "pressing and persistent," as established in the Vancouver case.

Holidays by Wardair®

GO WHEN THE PRICE IS LOW LOW LOW

A November to remember. . .

A winter holiday is not beyond your budget. The secret is to go when the price is low. And Holidays by Wardair has a warm place for you to go this November, when prices are lowest—Hawaii.

In November, Hawaiian beaches are just as sandy and skies are just as blue. You can work on your tan and your Christmas shopping list at the same time. In fact, with the money you save, you can even get a good start on your Christmas shopping.

In November the only thing that changes is the price. You still get the same "Wardair Class" service our passengers enjoy all year round—delicious hot meals, individually served on china dinnerware, chateau wines, liqueurs, bar service, tea, coffee, juice, milk or soft drinks—all at no additional cost.

In November you still fly non-stop to Hawaii aboard one of our fleet of wide-bodied aircraft.

In November, you get more for your money. So ask a travel agent to help you plan a November to remember with Holidays by Wardair.

In November. . .
When you go with Holidays by Wardair you save because airfare and hotel accommodation cost less. Check out the savings in the chart below!
Prices are based on Wardair ABC airfare from Vancouver plus 14 nights hotel accommodation at the Pacific Beach, Honolulu. Hotel rooms in Hawaii can be booked by Holidays by Wardair starting August 20, 1979.
Although hotel prices are quoted in Holidays by Wardair brochures in U.S. dollars, they have been converted to Canadian dollars for the purpose of this comparison at an exchange rate of $1.15 Cdn. = $1.00 U.S.

Who says football is a game?

A swollen nose beneath matted, straw-colored hair leaks blood on to a dirty pillow. A hand gropes from under the blankets, feeling for the alarm clock among pill bottles and empty beer cans. The bloated, scarred body rises groaning from the bed and heads stiffly toward the kitchen.

At first it's hard to recognize the star of North Dallas Forty. It's difficult to believe this hulking wreck could actually be handsome sex symbol Nick Nolte. The transformation is incredible; about the only remaining evidence of the former Nolte is the irrepressible grin that flashes across his now-pasty features.

Nolte is great as Phil Elliot, an out-of-shape, battered and desperate football player for a team called the North Dallas Bulls. His performance as a professional athlete determined to hang on to the only way of life he knows is both tough and sensitive. When he winces the audience can almost feel his pain.

Elliot is the hero in this story about the crazy-cruel world of professional football. His knee feels like it's full of gravel, he has a permanently dislocated shoulder, and joints that crack every time he moves. Pieces of his body have been sacrificed on football fields across America and pain keeps him awake almost every night.

Two films reviewed

by LORRAINE LOCHERTY

Director Ted Kotcheff has created a raunchy, funny movie that gives a revealing picture of professional football today. Teams are corporate tax write-offs and expensive playthings for rich tycoons. Game plans are premeditated by computers that store complete sets of statistics on every player in the league. Electronics is given more credit for winning games than human effort, and professional athletes are little more than machines. Team spirit is all but dead.

The locker room scenes are authentically hilarious and tragic at the same time. Humor is blended skilfully by Kotcheff with the serious theme of professional football as big business and the dehumanizing effect it's having on the sport. Kotcheff artfully captures the razzle-dazzle life of the players — the wild orgy-like parties, the pills, booze and dope — and at the same time shows us the pain and frustration of highly-paid professional athletes treated like equipment.

Cracks, sprains and fractures are tightly taped and players are injected with painkillers in wicked looking needles to desensitize areas the pills haven't already numbed. "You've got to recognize the difference between pain and injury," a coach (Charles Durning) tells one reluctant player.

Kotcheff collaborated on the screenplay with former Dallas Cowboy wide receiver Peter Gent, whose best-selling paperback novel of the same title is the basis for the movie.

Elliot's team-mates include a homocidal linebacker (Bo Svenson) and a prima donna, hillbilly quarterback played with drawling, down-home insolence by singer Mac Davis in his first screen appearance. Elliot's love interest is pale Dayle Haddon, who is out of her element in this macho film and has a tough time with her unimaginative part.

Elliot has the best hands in professional football but a stubborn resistance to the conformity demanded by his steely-eyed coaches, who lecture him on maturity and assign homework as if the team were a class of high-school kids. He endures the lofty patronizing of oil millionaire owner Conrad Hunter (Steve Forrest).

'Toad' has had enough of Vietnam in 'Graffiti II'

Elliot loves football so much he's willing to put up with almost anything. He even tells the coach he loves painkillers if that's what it takes to play an entire game. But mostly Elliot sits on the bench, waiting his moment of glory.

Richard Dreyfuss is missing and so is Suzanne Sommers. George Lucas has now turned his attention to directing more ambitious projects, like Star Wars.

But most of the people involved in American Graffiti are back for the sequel, More American Graffiti.

The sequel is a look at the old gang after 1962 and 1967. Steve (Ron Howard) and Laurie (Cindy Williams) are married. Debbie (Candy Clark) and Carol (Mackenzie Phillips) are grooving around San Francisco's Haight-Ashbury district. John Milner (Paul Le Mat) is a drag racer. Terry the Toad and Little Joe are over in Vietnam.

The movie is a crazy kaleidoscope of events — demonstrations, draft-card burnings, sit-ins, love-ins, and war sequences.

It was written and directed by B.W.L Norton, a former maker of rock and roll documentaries. Norton uses Country Joe and the Fish music and the voice of Wolfman Jack to recreate the mood of the '60's. Imaginative split-screen techniques and psychedelic, hallucinogenic photography also bring back memories of the turbulent decade.

Most of the action takes place on New Year's Eve's between 1964 and 1967. Norton's decision to split the action into separate strips and interweave them using the music and photography to tie it all together is interesting, but sometimes confusing. Also, some sequences have less impact than others and weaken the effect of the whole structure.

The end result is a film that is sometimes slow and difficult to follow, but also a poignant and worthwhile experience.

Conservatory expanding

What promises to be the most stirring year in its 15-year history begins Tuesday with the start of the fall semester of the Victoria Conservatory of Music.

Now recognized as one of Canada's leading music institutions, the Conservatory will be moving to its new home in the St.Ann's Academy Annex before the New Year. This will provide almost three times the present floor area, distributed over some 55 studios.

Expanding facilities have enabled the Conservatory to increase both teaching faculty and course offerings. Several distinguished musicians are joining the faculty for the start of the new year.

BROCK-SMITH
. . . joins faculty

Among them are Alma Brock-Smith, one of Canada's leading piano teachers who, since 1964, has been professor of piano at the University of Manitoba. Brock-Smith has achieved striking success as a teacher of both solo and duo-piano repertoire with many students having been accorded top honors and awards in Canada, the United States, and abroad.

She has adjudicated festivals and examinations throughout North America, including New York, Baltimore, Los Angeles, New Orleans, Phoenix, Minneapolis, Seattle and Denver and in most Major Canadian cities. In addition she regularly conducts master classes in these centres.

In 1977 and 1978 she conducted summer workshops at Wilfrid Laurier University in Waterloo, Ont., at the invitation of Dr. Christine K. Mather. Until recently Dean of Music at Wilfrid Laurier, Dr. Mather is now Director (Music Administration) at the Victoria Conservatory.

The Conservatory is also welcoming pianist and teacher Gilbert Munroe, founder-director of the successful Conservatory of Music in Medicine Hat, to its piano faculty.

Paloma de la Guerra, who has taught in the Victoria area for several years, joins the faculty as a specialist in the Suzuki Piano Program, which has enjoyed a notable expansion in the past two years. Guerra is a graduate of the Royal Conservatory of Music in Madrid.

Heather Crook, recently appointed organist and choir director at St.John's Anglican Church, will be a member of the theory faculty this fall. Trained in London where she studied organ, piano, viola, composition and choir conducting, Crook received her licentiate from the Royal Academy of Music, and her Associate degree from the Royal College of Music. An organ scholar at Girton College, Cambridge, she recieved her Bachelor of Music degree with honors. She is a Fellow of the Royal College of Organists.

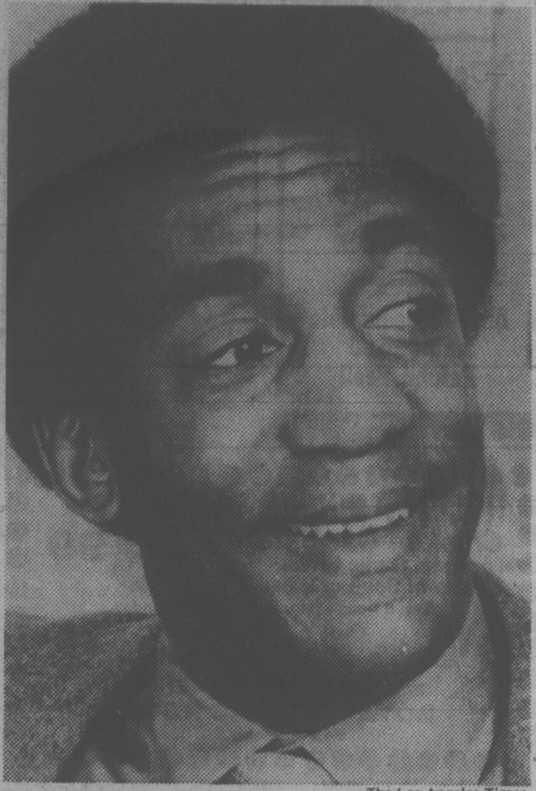
The comedian as jazzman

Today's Music

By Leonard Feather



The Los Angeles Times

Cosby . . . not just dilettante drummer

Since 1965, when Bill Cosby took to the air and became part of the national consciousness through "I Spy," millions of words have been written about him as actor, comedian, philosopher, husband, father, and education student. (The dissertation that earned him his PhD at the University of Massachusetts concerned the problems of minority children in urban schools.)

Almost totally ignored has been a fact always central to Dr. Cosby's life: he could as well have made jams the subject of his doctoral thesis. As a drummer he may seem to be a dilettante, but his concern for the art form has long been evident to those of us who, in the pre-"I Spy" days, were apt to find him seated alone late at night in some small Los Angeles club, drinking deep of the sounds of Miles Davis or John Coltrane.

During a pleasant evening with Camille Cosby and their five children at their alternate home in Pacific Palisades, Calif., (their main residence is outside Amherst, Mass.), Cosby spent a lot of time, as he so often has, expounding on a subject always dear to his heart.

"As a spectator," he said, "I go and watch, see and feel. Jazz is a music that was responsible for my dealing with my humor the way I do. During the period that was most meaningful to me — from the early 1950s through 1964 — there was a sense of timing, a drive, of building to many crescendos, that was unique.

"It was a time when you could go in the record store and be sure that no matter what you bought, it would be great. Art Blakey and Horace Silver with those wonderful records for Blue Note. The Modern Jazz Quartet. One of the great albums, Jimmy Giuffre with the MJQ. Mingus with his humor and wildness.

"I remember enjoying Miles so much when both Coltrane and Cannonball Adderley were with him. In fact, Miles' most vital contribution may be the sidemen he's had, who went on to do their own thing. During that free-form period, when he had Tony Williams on drums — Tony was about 17 — and Herbie Hancock on piano, I laughed a couple of times because I thought these boys were running away with the old man. But that just wasn't so. Miles always knew where he was going. Every time he formed a new group the street talk would be oh-oh, that's the end of Miles; but he'd come up with something new and great, and everybody said phew!

"I'm not saying that this was the only creative era. It's just that there is a different thinking pattern to the way so many musicians play now. A lot of it has an intellect that requires a learning procedure, which I am not willing to go for. Sure, I enjoy the Chick Coreas, the Herbie Hancocks, and this fine pianist Don Pullen who was with Mingus, and a tenor of the post-Coltrane generation like Joe Henderson. But what I grew up with I am more familiar with, therefore it sounds better to me."

Though he never became a true professional himself, musicians have been a part of Cos' social circle since he was an adolescent in Philadelphia.

He has mixed feelings about the direction jazz has taken during the past decade. "Fusion music has become very, very boring to me. I liked the drummers who built or played patterns, like Max Roach, or built to a climax like Art Blakey, or had a drive like Philly Joe Jones. I enjoyed hearing Elvin Jones connecting with Coltrane, urging him on, as if he were saying 'I am your power.'

"What do you have today to compare with that? Recently I went to see a group with a drummer who brought a whole Sanford & Son junkyard of percussion on stage with him. The band set up a vamp and kept repeating that monotonous titty-boom, titty-boom beat . . . this cat had about 10,000 drums, yet everything was a pounding fusion and nobody got above a limited emotional level. I'm not saying these kids aren't proficient; it isn't that they cannot play, but they choose to play this way, and it's not for me."

Given his antipathetic view of "titty-boom" music, how did Cosby feel about the revolution caused by Miles Davis when the trumpeter's "Bitches Brew" album virtually gave birth to the jazz-rock phenomenon?

"I think I'm one of the few people who really appreciated it. See, I'm anti-rock, and rock to me, despite all its intellectual viewers and reviewers, is very, very simple. But Miles did something else: he took the blues line and spaced it differently, so that people didn't even realize it was the blues. He put a pattern in there for the bass player to hold on to, and then played around it; and, of course, the drummer was titty-booming strongly. I find it sad that some people today don't know about all this."

As a 15-year veteran of network television, Cosby has firm opinions concerning TV's perennial neglect of jazz.

"I think the people who are crusading for more jazz are partly right. You can get an argument as to whether or not it's color prejudice. But I saw this young white kid, Scott Hamilton, and they were giving him accolades on the 'Today' show, saying he was taking whatever the old guys like Ben Webster used to play on tenor sax in the '50s. They were as big as Art Blakey and the Jazz Messengers, but not as big as Brubeck or Miles Davis; and then with the decline of sales of their kind of album, they wind up taking gigs in places where they really don't want to work.

"Finally in 1970-something, they're really struggling, and some young executive who always loved them decides it's time to record these two. He searches, finds them in some obscure club, tells them they're going to record, and they can hardly believe their luck.

"But then he takes them to the studio and some hot-shot producer tells them they don't need the rest of the band; the tracks have all been laid out for them and all they have to do is record on these pre-recorded tracks. This says something about the problems confronting a musician who wants to keep his integrity nowadays. I have the script about one-third finished and I believe it will make a real statement."

Folk singer appeals to young

Concerts designed especially for the youngest of all audiences are to take place Saturday Sept.8 at McPherson Playhouse.

Children in the three to seven age bracket are the particular focus of a performance by Raffi, the Canadian folk singer who empathizes so closely with young audiences. But his style of musical entertainment has an appeal that goes beyond the tots to include youthful teen-agers and adults.

Raffi is well known for his excellent educational records on the Troubadour Records label. Singable Songs for the Very Young and More Singable Songs are two of his LPs. Coming soon is a new release entitled The Corner Grocery Store.

At two performances — 1 p.m. and 3 p.m. — Raffi will entertain with sing-alongs and other audience participation numbers. Following the show he will talk to the children in the lobby and sign autographs.

In great demand in Toronto, his home base, and with record sales soaring to the coveted "gold" status, Raffi regards as most important and satisfying the eagerness of the children who cluster around him after a performance. It is, he says, the essence of his work.

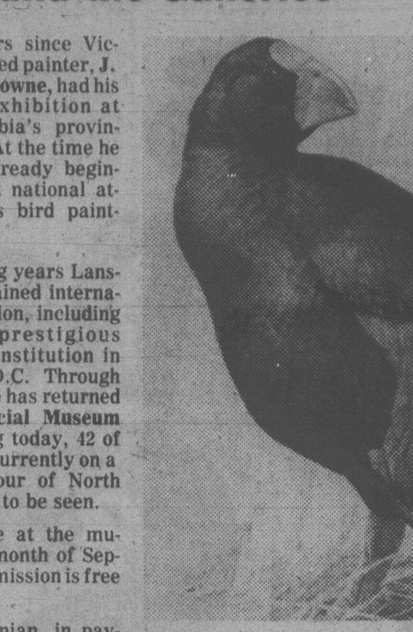
Lansdowne birds on show



'Takahe'
by Fenwick Lansdowne

It is 27 years since Victoria's renowned painter, J. Fenwick Lansdowne, had his first major exhibition at British Columbia's provincial museum. At the time he was 15 and already beginning to attract national attention for his bird paintings.

In succeeding years Lansdowne has attained international recognition, including that of the prestigious Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C. Through this medium he has returned to the Provincial Museum where, opening today, 42 of his paintings, currently on a Smithsonian tour of North American, are to be seen.

They will be at the museum for the month of September and admission is free to the public.

The Smithsonian, in paying tribute to Lansdowne, says "he continues the tradition of the great artist/naturalists, combining art and science with meticulous realism."

S. Dillon Ripley, secretary of the institute, says "his mastery of a demanding art requires scrupulous fidelity to nature without mere imitation. He has often been compared to John James Audubon, the most famous of wildlife painters."

The paintings on display were created to illustrate a book by Ripley, Rails of the World. Rails are marsh birds. Some are unable to fly and many of them are endangered species.

Self-taught, Lansdowne's interest in painting and birds began at age five when his mother introduced him to the art and to identifying the birds in their Victoria garden.

His works have been featured in most major North American publications, are hanging in Buckingham Palace, Audubon House in New York, the National Museum of Natural History in Washington, and galleries and museums in England, the United States, Canada, Australia and other countries.

On view for British Columbians before setting out on a tour of European galleries beginning in London this fall will be a collection of 30 paintingjs by 15 B.C. artists.

Such noted artists as Brian Travers-Smith, Ron Woodall, Fenwick Lansdowne and Harry Heine are represented in the exhibition. Provincial Secretary Hugh Curtis has announced a preview showing of the oils and watercolors, to take place in the Robson Square Media Centre, Vancouver, for a week starting Wednesday.

Curtis describes the showing as a rare opportunity for citizens to see "British Columbia through the eyes of the artist".

The Handicapped Action Committee is sponsoring its second annual display of arts and crafts by handicapped persons. It will take place in the Hillside Mall, Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

A draw will be held on Saturday. The prizes consist of a sketch, a watercolor and a Tiffany lamp, all work by handicapped artists.

Energy use

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (AP) — The average North American uses more energy in one day than a typical inhabitant of the Third World uses in a month, says William Douce, president of Phillips Petroleum.

$300 gold spurs rush in Nevada

SAN FRANCISCO (NYT) — A second gold rush is under way in the historic gold fields of the West, spurred by the metal's rapidly rising price.

Gold mines are reopening or being surveyed, tailings from the old mines are being worked and prospectors are combing Nevada in particular for new deposits.

"There's practically a geologist for every rock," said Robert S. Shoemaker, a metallurgist with the Bechtel Corp. here who has formed a partnership to reprocess the tailings from an old mine at Tuscarora in northern Nevada. "Helicopters are flying around all over the place," he added. "They're staking claims by helicopter."

Much of the new activity is concentrated in the northern part of Nevada, near Elko, an area where a significant strike — in modern terms — has been made by the Freeport Gold Co., a joint venture of the Freeport Minerals Co. and the FMC Corp. Freeport Gold's president, Joseph C. Farrell, is expected to move from New York to Elko to direct operations.

At the same time, work is under way on the western edge of Nevada to produce gold — and silver — again from what may have been the richest deposit ever found, the Comstock Lode.

And on the other side of the Sierra Nevada, in the Mother Lode country of California, a company called the Placer Service Corporation has leased old mines dating back to the gold rush, near what were known as the Malakoff diggings. The company has begun studies to see if the faint traces of gold still underground can be brought out at a profit.

The economic impetus behind these new ventures is that the metal's price, now more than $300 an ounce, has risen to the point where it pays to move five tons of rock to obtain an ounce of gold.

With that kind of ratio, said Ray Hunter of the California Mining Association, "you can move rocks for about $50 a ton and make a profit; a few years ago you couldn't touch it."

There are no nuggets left to be found, at least not in commercial quantities, but invisible traces of gold around old deposits, as well as untouched deposits of gold too fine to be seen, can be found and mined by chemical methods.

In the Comstock Lode, where the Houston Oil and Minerals Corp. is digging, the project's manager, Donald Hopkins, said, "the low-grade deposit forms a halo around the higher-grade vein system that was mined out back in its heyday."

"The present price of gold and silver makes it attractive to us," he added.

The microscopic gold — sometimes called "no see-um" gold — can be located by testing rock samples for arsenic and mercury, with which it is often associated.

"We've never seen any of the gold prior to processing it," said William L. Wilson of the Idaho Mining Corp., which operates the Windfall mine at Eureka, Nev. "It's all been walked over probably a thousand times," said Bechtel's Shoemaker.

This modern method of locating trace gold is accompanied by techniques for separating it that were equally unheard of by the early miners.

Using such techniques as heap leaching, a Newmont Mining Corp. operation at Carlin, Nev., produced $12 million in profits for the company last year.

But although the Carlin mine is the largest solely gold mine in the West and produced 152,000 troy ounces of gold last year, it is still comparatively small.

Great progress in transplants but still snags

By JACK JACKSON

BOSTON (UPI) — In the dozen years since the first heart transplant, doctors have made major advances in the science of transplantation — although some major stumbling blocks remain.

Dr. Christiaan Barnard's historic handiwork in 1967 would seem crude by today's standards. The heart transplant procedure has been refined — the surgery is more delicate and the after-surgery followup is more effective.

Writing in today's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine, Drs. Paul S. Russel and A. Benedict Cosimi say progress has made the procedure more valuable for many doctors.

Heart transplants, they said, "can now be regarded with cautious optimism because of progress in ... surgical techniques, improved methods to diagnose and treat rejection and more effective protocols to treat post-transplantation complications."

In many cases, the most basic problem with transplanting human organs — tissue rejection — has been overcome with the use of drugs.

The recipient's immune system attacks the donated organ because it perceives proteins on the organ's surface as foreign. Certain treatments can slow or shut down the process without harming the patient's ability to fight disease.

"If appropriate precautions are taken, serious reactions to the foreign protéin are suprisingly uncommon," the researchers said.

Organs can be kept alive longer after the donor's death, allowing them to be tranported greater distances to where they are needed. But this just partly compensates for the problem of inadequate numbers of donors, the authors said.

"In heart transplantation ... no more than about 10,000 patients (donors) per year are now considered suitable," they said. "This figure could rise to 50,000 or higher if there is major progress in the field."

Russel and Cosimi, transplantation surgeons at the Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston, cautioned that a patient with a donated heart has only a 50 per cent chance of living five years after the operation.

Kidney transplants have been more successful, particularly when the donor and recipient are relatives. The survival rate in lung recipients, however, is the lowest for all major organs to be transplanted.

In fewer than 50 reported cases, the longest survival after a lung transplant has been only 10 months and, the authors said, "it is not very likely that lung transplantation will become commonplace in the near future."

Other organ transplants have proven very effective, they said, including bone and liver, as well as skin grafts for burn victims.

Fever flies to Fiji

SUVA, Fiji (CP) — Ross River fever has arrived here in style from Australia — aboard luxury jetliners.

Ross River fever, previously confined to Queensland, was taken to Fiji by infected tourists flying in from Australia.

It resulted in an epidemic there and, in turn, spread to New Zealand.

Fiji has thus far kept mosquito-borne malaria as well as cholera out of the islands.

Ross River fever is carried mainly by two mosquitoes, Aedes vigilax and Culex annulirostris, both common in Fiji.

The symptoms of the fever are a slight fever and a mild headache.

It causes joint pains, often severe, with the joints often markedly swollen. The swelling often does not last long, but the pain might persist for several days.

There is a rash in many cases, which affects the legs and arms more than the body.

Ross River fever is harmless apart from the discomfort it causes.

Village sets fall plans

The Vancouver Island Christian Village is beginning its fall program of studies Sept. 11.

This non-denominational group, dedicated to encouraging Christian growth and maturity through Bible study, is temporarily located at Queenswood House of Studies, 2494 Arbutus, Victoria.

The village was founded last spring, at which time two successful courses were offered, attended by some 60 people. In June, two special seminars were also presented and were well-supported.

This fall's program is an ambitious one, offering a variety of courses given by well-qualified Bible teachers. In brief, the courses are:

Genesis II. Continuing studies in the lives of Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph. Tuesday mornings. Instructor, Esther Bennett.

Basic Bible study. Instruction in using resource materials. Tuesday evenings. Instructor—Esther Bennett.

Thessalonians. Glimpses of the return of Our Lord. Wednesday mornings and evenings. Instructor—Esther Bennett.

Epistle of I John. Love for the Brethren. Tuesday mornings, Wednesday evenings. Instructor—Sharon Pryor.

Praise, worship, and prayer. Learning to participate. Tuesday evenings, Wednesday mornings. Instructor—Sharon Pryor.

The effective, caring Christian. Understanding ourselves and others. Thursday mornings and evenings. Instructor—Ted Chapman.

The Gospel of John, Part I. Jesus' life as seen in John's gospel, a course particularly geared toward those with limited experience in Bible study. Thursday mornings and evenings. Instructor—Judy Trueman.

Cost of each nine-week course is $30 a person or $45 a couple.

Brochures with further information and registration details are available by calling 598-7372.

Church Chronicles

Service here for Lord Louis

Wednesday is the day of the funeral service in England for Lord Louis Mountbatten and those who were murdered with him in Ireland.

At 11 a.m., a memorial eucharist will be celebrated in Christ Church Cathedral to commend their souls to God and pray for the peace of Ireland.

James Bay United Church is appealing for congregation members who like to sing and share in the ministry of music to join the church choir.

Practice, under the direction of minister Rev. Bert Forsythe, will resume Wednesday at 7:30 p.m.

An ecumenical Christian theatre group is being considered for Greater Victoria. According to the organizers, acting experience is not necessary, just a creative, personal sense of prayer and the radical implications of being a follower of Jesus.

Those interested should phone 386-3296 and ask for Esther Muirhead.

Victoria district CGIT groups are holding a two-day campout at George Pringle camp, Shawnigan Lake, Sept. 14-16. Girls aged 12 to 17 are invited to participate and learn about the movement.

Registration and information available from CGIT leader in your church or contact Joan Sharpe at 477-1576.

Refugee sponsorship rises

The Anglican synod office has reported that participation in the sponsorship of Southeast Asian refugee families by Anglican churches and individuals in the Victoria area is gathering momentum.

Christ Church Cathedral, St. John's and St. Philip's Oak Bay have each signed sponsorship agreements with the federal government, St. George's Cadboro Bay is reported to be on the point of doing so, Holy Trinity is participating in a joint interchurch project, and two groups of individuals are participating as well.

A step forward has been the decison of the provincial government to provide medical assistance for the refugee families immediately upon arrival.

Concern has been expressed that a sponsor could find himself responsible for large medical bills resulting from such causes as illness incurred before arrival. The provincial government's action takes care of this.

A high degree of cooperation has been received from the Victoria office of employment and immigration Canada, who have greatly simplified the procedures for signing agreements. The church appoints a committee with signing authority, and sends it to the Customs building to meet with employment and immigration officials. The agreement has been known to be drawn up and signed in half an hour.

Contributions are coming in to the Anglican synod office and to the various parish offices, and more parishes are expected to enter into agreements shortly.

Regent College appoints new principal

The appointment of Carl Edwin Armerding as principal of Regent College, Vancouver, signals the end of a nine-month search by a committee of the board of governors.

Armerding, 43, has served as a member of the faculty of Regent College since the beginning of its first academic year in 1969.

An editor-at-large of Christianity Today, he is well known as a writer and lecturer on Old Testament subjects and is a frequent participant in Jewish-Christian dialogue. He has been a regional president of the Society of Biblical Literature and also a leader in the Evangelical Fellowship of Canada.

After graduating from Gordon College in New England, Armerding served with the U.S. Navy and afterwards as a staff member of the Officers Christian Union in Europe.

He returned to graduate studies at Trinity Evangelical Divinity School in Illinois and Brandeis University in Boston, where he completed his PhD. in Near Eastern studies.

Following a year of research as a Fellow of the Hebrew Union College in Jerusalem and a second year as visiting professor at Wheaton Graduate School in Illinois, he came to Vancouver to aid in the founding of Regent College, an experimental graduate school of theology on the campus of the University of British Columbia.

James Houston, who is succeeded by Armerding as principal, has been appointed Chancellor of Regent College.

Nelson prepares for new role as Mormon bishop

Mormons call new bishop, bid fond farewell to Lyle

The sacrament service attended by members of the Victoria congregation of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Mormons) last Sunday proved to be emotional as well as surprising.

After an almost two-year tenure, members of the first ward had come to know and understand Bishop Hugh Lyle. And so it was with regret and a deep appreciation for all that he had done for them, that they watched as the stake presidency released Lyle from his calling as bishop of the congregation, also known as first ward.

Following the release of Lyle, Robert (Bob) Kenneth Nelson was called and by a vote of ward members was sustained as bishop. The principle of common consent is observed in all the organizations of the church.

Bishop Nelson was born in Victoria in 1949.

Ten years ago he joined the Mormon church and has served in various callings or positions. He and his wife, the former Susan Anne Williams of Victoria, have two girls, seven and four, plus a one-year-old boy.

There is no paid clergy as such in the Mormon church. The leaders or administrators throughout the entire organization are men and women called from its own ranks who depend on outside sources for their income or livelihood. Nelson will continue in his present position, that of manager of a local music store.

As well as being the presiding authority in the ward, the bishop is also considered to be the father of the ward. To allow Bishop Nelson to function with divine authority, he was ordained a high priest and set apart as a bishop by stake president Howard L. Biddulph shortly after Sunday's sacrament service.

Report given on Uganda

GARTRELL
. . . explains funding

Bishop Roy Gartrell of the Anglican Diocese of B.C. has reported on actions undertaken by the Anglican Church in Uganda.

Uganda has now been freed from the dictatorship and destruction of Idi Amin, and development work lies ahead, he said.

The General Synod Division of World Program recently forwarded $19,550 to the church in Uganda, half of which is undesignated; and the Primate's World Relief and Development Fund sent an emergency grant of $5,000.

There may be further allocations made by World Program in addition to its existing budget commitment of a further $20,000. In June, a second $5,000 was allocated by the Primate's World Relief and Development Fund.

No special appeal for Uganda is planned at this time, but any extra funds designated within parishes or dioceses for Uganda may be forwarded to either World Program for the ongoing mission of the church, or to the Primate's World Relief and Development Fund for relief and development purposes.

The primate's fund will make every effort to match funds available with governmental aid funds in Canada.

At the Anglican Consultative Council meeting in Huron College in London, Ont., in May, involving Canon Wesonga from Uganda, a number of world Anglican leaders learned that the church's province of Uganda appointed Kodwo Ankrah as co-ordinator of relief.

They were concerned about three things:

- Too much aid would arrive at one time, which could not be properly administered;
- There could easily be competition, both on the part of the different dioceses and parts of the country, and on the part of donor agencies;
- Funds might be sent to Uganda and get locked into the country where goods could not be purchased.

Perspectives

Maurice Cranston, an English scholar, wrote a small book on the life and work of the controversial French philosopher, Jean-Paul Sartre, in which he says, "Sartre is an atheist who understands man's thirst for God." He adds that Sartre "teaches them that they must learn to live with their thirst forever unsatisfied."

There is much evidence that many people today do have a yearning which can be given the metaphorical label, "thirst for God"—even though some think that it cannot be satisfied.

This is a yearning for something beyond the self with which the self can have a redeeming, healing relationship, a yearning for something that is over and above the self and over and above the phenomena of nature which are apprehended by the senses and the scientific instruments which are extensions of our senses.

Many of the new religious movements of our time, including those which have come out of eastern religions, seem to be exercises in trying to come to terms with this thirst.

I have the uneasy feeling that the decline in appeal and influence of the conventional churches has been caused in part by their striving so hard to be relevant and involved that they have tended to neglect the force of this elemental thirst.

In many of our congregations we tend to soft-pedal the deeper realities of our faith in our concern for things which are merely of the surface of life. Faith grounded in the Bible must, of course, be concerned for the problems and hurts of the world, but it must never forget that it is grounded in and nourished by experience of the holy.

Some years ago Adolf Keller, a Swiss theologian, on a visit to North America while dictating some lecture notes to a stenographer said, "Redemption is a cosmic process."

When he received the typescript he found that she had typed, "Redemption is a cosmetic process." Much of our religious practice has indeed become a cosmetic sort of thing—adding a touch of color to the lives of people who happen to care for that sort of thing, but not getting into the depth of their lives. Some of us seem to think that there is something indecent in probing the depths of faith.

I suggest that some of our feelings of anxiety and depression and despair are in reality unrecognized symptons of a thirst for God. Many of us are kept from recognizing the nature of this yearning by our pride, by our well-honed sense of self-sufficiency. But many of us have learned that when we leap over that barrier we come to awareness of the divine, awareness of the redeeming reality of God which helps us to healing and fulfilment.

In a book with an evocative title, Man Is Not Alone, the late Abraham Joseph Heschel, a Jewish scholar who in recent years has helped both Jews and Christians to see life in the biblical perspective, put the issue in this way: "God's existence can never be tested by human thought. All proofs are merely demonstrations of our thirst for Him. Does the thirsty one need proof of his thirst?"

(Davidson is minister of Dominion-Chalmers United Church, Ottawa.)

AN IDEAL BLEND OF POWER, PERFORMANCE, AND PRICE.
The Amplifier Section: The Marantz 1550 delivers 50 watts per channel into 8 ohms, minimum continuous power output with inaudible distortion. Its Full Complementary Direct Coupled Output ensures reliable, linear sound reproduction throughout the bandwidth.
The Tuner Section: Model 1550 incorporates a tuner section engineered for fast, accurate tuning and crisp, clear station reception. That's why we've included separate AM/FM Signal Strength and FM Center Tuning Meters.
And we've designed the tuner to deliver exceptional 50dB stereo quieting of 42uV, to help eliminate background noise even when receiving distant or weak stations.
The Preamp Section: Keyword to the 1550's preamp section is "Usability." One example: in addition to Bass and Treble Controls, we've included a Midrange Control that's especially useful in adjusting vocal performance to suit listener tastes. And we've also included Loudness Contour Control, FM Muting, Tape Copy Function, 2 tape Monitors, 12 dB per octave High and Low Filters and Speaker System Switching.

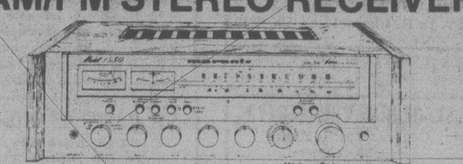
marantz 1530 AM/FM STEREO RECEIVER



Walnut Cabinet optional

AN EXCELLENT RECEIVER VALUE

Marantz introduces a medium-powered receiver with many of the features usually found only in high-powered receivers. A handful of examples: Dual Tuning Meters, Midrange Tone Control and a complete complement of preamp functions including a 12dB per octave High Filter and Tape Monitoring circuitry. Combine them with traditional Marantz gold anodized styling, impeccable Marantz engineering and performance excellence, and you've got one of the best receiver values ever to carry the Marantz name.
The Model 1530 delivers 30 watts per channel into 8 ohms, minimum continuous power output with inaudible distortion. Impressive, even for receivers costing much more.

EPI THE LINEAR SOUND OF EPI.

The EPI 100 has become the industry standard for bookshelf loudspeakers. Leading consumer and audiophile publications have consistently given the EPI 100 their top ratings. It does everything you want a loudspeaker to do, and it does it all in a compact cabinet! The EPI 100 offers EPI's celebrated Linear Sound: a pure, uncoloured, natural sound from top to bottom. With no artificial boosting of the bass to impress the innocent. And all the nuances at the treble end that, on most speakers, just fade away.

marantz EPI We sound better.

So much for so little at the heart of this fine system is the powerful Marantz 1530 AM/FM stereo receiver. With 30 watts RMS per channel and super low distortion of only .08%, the 1530 will give you accurate, trouble-free performance from all sources. The Marantz 6025 is an easy to operate belt drive turntable with a newly designed tonearm that reduces tracking distortion by 30%. The 6025 has automatic return and shutoff and is complete with a Shure M70B magnetic cartridge. Accuracy and unparalleled sound quality have made the EPI 100's the most highly reviewed and rated loudspeaker in the industry. The 8" woofer reproduces full tight bass with low distortion and the 1" air spring tweeter reproduces exhilirating highs with excellent dispersion. Come into A&B Sound and hear how much $699.95 will buy.

Get ready for baggy jeans

TORONTO (CP) — Trying to squeeze yourself into skinny jeans? Well, you can breathe easier because relief may be just around the corner.

Skintight madness could be a thing of the past come next spring when the baggy jean silhouette is supposed to hit Canada.

The new arrival is called the "slouch pant" and it's already the rage in Europe.

It's a jean which is fitted around the waist, loose and baggy through the hips and leg and tapered at the ankle.

In contrast to the narrow jean, the slouch pant looks best when worn with flat or low-heeled shoes, rather than high heels that many women are teetering on now.

The denim craze means that designers have been experimenting with other new jean styles.

One of the best examples around now is the 1950s-style denim jean from France, with side pockets, a side zipper and a tapering leg falling to just above the ankle with little side slits at the bottom.

This is a dressier jean than the traditional western-style and can easily go to the office this fall with a blazer, a vibrantly-colored blouse, pumps and a couple of simple accessories like a bange and beret.

STYLISH SLOUCH and the office worker are latest jean styles. Jean silhouette, left, is tight at the hips, baggy through leg, and narrow at ankle. Dressy French denims, right, feature side pockets and slits at ankle.

WESTERN LOOK is expected to be a winner, featuring straight-legged jeans with embroidered pockets.

Doing the Town

With DOROTHY FRASER

Study time coming up! . . .

In a very short time now thousands of young people . . . from first graders to college and university students . . . will be hitting the books . . . and study periods will be looming large in their lives . . . In view of the importance of study, it's almost unbelievable the conditions under which some people do it . . . Like using an old rickety card table for a desk . . . An inefficient lamp never designed for prolonged reading! . . . So today we'd like to suggest that you parents of student offspring provide them with an efficient study area . . . With a proper desk and chair . . . Lighting that won't strain their eyes! . . . Standard Furniture have quite a range of desks of all types . . . Big desks . . . Small desks . . . Formal desks and casual desks . . . Desks just right for student's bedroom . . . Or handsome pieces of furniture for your living room, family room or den . . . It's nice to have an office area in your home where you and your wife can do your "paper work"! . . . Getting back to Standard's selection of desks, you'll find them in walnut, maple, oak, teak; white painted wood, etc. . . . Lots of them have mar-proof finish tops so they can't be harmed by glue, crayons or sticky fingers on the part of the young fry! . . . Prices start at well under $100! . . . Standard also have book shelves which are handy for organizing and holding books and study material . . . not to mention a fine selection of efficient lighting for your office-study area . . . Standard Furniture Co., 737 Yates St., 382-5111.

Get your hair in shape for fall . . .

Talk about coincidence! . . . We were just sitting down to write this piece about the Hair Society the other day . . . and wondering what you'd most like to know about what we consider the finest hairdressing establisment in town . . . when our phone rang . . . An acquaintance with an urgent request . . . Where should she go for a really successful permanent on her fine, "difficult" hair? . . . Well naturally we told her about the Hair Society . . . Their extraordinary skill and expertise with any kind of hair . . . And how they consider difficult hair a challenge to which they bring all their knowledge to bear! . . . We know how very true this is, because NOBODY could have more recalcitrant hair than us . . . But you'd never know it due to care lavished on it by those truly professional and caring stylists at the Hair Society! . . . Just last week we had a new perm to start fall off properly . . . Turned out great, as usual! . . . So many of us women are apt to look a bit bedraggled after a summer in the sun . . . And when we start wearing our fall clothes, limp, dry hair will look worse than ever! . . . So why don't you make an appointment really soon to have your hair cut, or colored, or permed . . . or all of these . . . plus conditioning treatments to bring softness and lustre and manageability to YOUR hair? You'll love the care, and service and expertise you'll get at . . . The Hair Society, 1712 Douglas St., 385-8133 and Witch's Hut, 728 View St., 388-7368.

T'will soon by coat weather! . . .

Already the days are drawing in . . . and before we know it, coats will be the order of the day . . . and night! . . . The newly arrived coats at Charmante's are a joy to look at . . . And will certainly prove a double joy to wear . . . Many of them are all-weather coats that take to rain like ducks to water . . . yet look equally chic when the sun smiles down . . . This week we admired a beige Acquascutum coat, double-breasted and belted . . . and a very pretty blue singe-breasted Acquascutum . . . also belted, but equally smart worn loose . . . Both of these are PETITES . . . Good news for the shorter woman . . . And great protection on rainy, windy days . . . There's a good selection of Acquascutums in regular sizes as well . . . Raincoats with zip-in wool linings to take you cozily through the winter . . . A variety of colors in all these . . . Another attractive coat for fall is in berry velvet . . . Also in black, this coat has a yoke front and deep back pleat . . . A special feature at Charmante's this week is a one-of-a-kind outfit, size 11 . . . Very chic coat, skirt and beret . . . all matching and carried out in an aubergine striped wool . . . There are pretty autumn shades in wool blend coats for fall . . . One in brandy in a semi-fitted style buttoning to the neck . . . A similar style in sage green . . . Some elegant camel coats and warm "fun fur" with leather-like trim . . . Charmante's, Hillside Shopping Centre, 595-1555.

Sapphires . . . loved since the dawn of history! . . .

The ancient Persians, we're told, believed the earth rested on a sapphire whose reflection gave color to the sky . . . Isn't this an enchanting bit of pure poetry about the lovely oriental gem which in our day is the September birthstone? . . . For anyone who loves sapphires . . . but especially for the lucky lady whose birthday comes up this month . . . De Goutiere has some beautiful sapphire rings which we admired extravagantly . . . and learned, incidentally, that besides the inimitable blue sapphire . . . sapphires also come in a variety of other shades and colorings . . . For instance, one very unusual ring Mr. de G. showed us is set with an orange sapphire surrounded with smaller blue sapphires . . . And another ring has pastel sapphires . . . orange, blue, yellow pink and mauve . . . from South Africa . . . in a striking contemporary setting . . . $1650 for this "conversation-making" beauty! . . . A three-stone ring . . . all of equal size . . . consists of deep blue sapphire and two diamonds . . . Another is a cluster ring . . . Sapphire with diamonds around it . . . Still another is a sapphire with marquis diamonds in an offset design . . . A lovely cocktail ring has pear-shaped sapphires and diamonds . . . very reasonably priced at $610 . . . We saw a couple of pairs of lovely little sapphire stud earrings . . . One with stones set in a gold sculptured design, at $295 . . . The other with sapphires clustered around a centre diamond . . . $750 . . . De Goutiere Ltd., 2542 Estevan Ave., 592-3224.

Accessories for the total look . . .

Distingished new accessories are the big eye-catchers at Gibson's this week! . . . Their handbags are absolutely gorgeous, and provide the right accent to make an outfit outstanding . . . as opposed to merely smart! . . . We noticed several big briefcase bags in the new camel and mahogany shades . . . A large clutch bag in black, camel, burgundy . . . A grey and black classic bag . . . An elegant semi-dressy brown snakeskin . . . And some stunning European bags in Khaki green pig suede and leather . . . One of these is a pouch, another a tote style . . . They're all roomy as can be, and will serve you well for years to come . . . Equally gorgeous are the new scarves from Italy, France and Germany . . . There are Odile St. Germain double-width cravats in solid colors . . . Scarves by Pierre Balmain and Daniel de Foret . . . in luscious chocolate, burgundy and green shades . . . A magnificent large square . . . in greys, blues and greens, has tiny pin dots . . . And there are huge printed chiffon squares and oblongs in deep, dark tones for that romantic, soft look! . . . Speaking of chiffon . . . Gibson's have a new dress in a ribbed chiffon by Vali . . . Either in black . . . THE most important color for this new season . . . or a burgundy-tinged brown shade . . . Mandarin neck, soft skirt and sleeves, covered buttons . . . A versatile dress par excellence! . . . Gibson's, 708 View St., 384-5913.

Gorgeous sheepskin slippers . . .

There's no way we're going to start talking Christmas in September . . . but we'll just put this bee in your bonnet: A new shipment of the most gorgeous sheepskin slippers we've ever laid eyes on has just arrived from New Zealand at the Alcheringa . . . They make fantastic gifts . . . and if you're smart you'll stake your claims fairly soon! . . . These slippers are all machine washable . . . and come in a style for everybody . . . They're deliciously warm on the feet . . . but not so warm as to make feet perspire . . . The beige or white mule types, some curly, some wooly . . . are extremely popular . . . $21 for ladies' and $23-$25 for men's sizes . . . Another style has wooly sheepskin both outside and in . . . $25.98 and $27.98 . . . There's a luxurious long-haired sheepskin which reminds us of the llama slippers we brought back from Peru . . . $27.50 . . . A cozy boot style has a wedge heel and hard sole . . . ideal for the woman who needs extra support . . . $28.50 . . . And a beautiful mocassin with double layer of sheepskin inside . . . sueded exterior . . . priced at $34 for ladies, $36.50 for men . . . Nice selection of colors in all of these slippers . . . Sheepskin insoles so great for hiking boots or regular walking shoes, are regularly priced at $2.98 . . . And do see the pure wool knitting yarns from Australia . . . lovely textures . . . And English 4-ply wool for socks . . . beautifully soft and fine! . . . Alcheringa, 616 Trounce Alley, 383-8224.

Create your own fall wardrobe! . . .

No doubt about it, our best stores are showing beautiful clothes for fall . . . but the price tags can't be described as particularly "beautiful", can they? . . . So much of the cost of today's ready-made clothing goes for labor . . . which is why, if you're handy with a sewing machine, you're indeed blessed among women! . . . If you're capable of making things yourself . . . or have someone to do it for you . . . do pay an early visit to Eaton's Fabric Shop and let yourself be inspired by all the delectable fabrics you'll find there . . . This week we were shown the first of the new fall arrivals, and told of many more now on the way . . . There's a wool/mohair/nylon boucle coating at $20 per m. 150 cm wide, in really nice shades of Copen blue, teal, rust, gold, wine, grey claret and black . . . Another acrylic/nylon boucle, at $15 a m . . . is suitable for suits and dresses . . . It's a mix-and-match fabric in three different combinations . . . A stripe, a perfectly plain material, and one with a tweedy look . . . Blues, browns, wines and greens . . . Just in is another mix-and-match wool/polyester group at $18 . . . There are plaids and plains in this, lovely for suits, skirts or slacks . . . Another exciting new 100% wool striped fabric is $20 per m. . . . So fine and silky are the new exclusive 100% cotton prints in dark fall colors that we still can't believe they're not silk! . . . Noticed some lustrous washable cotton velvet prints at $20 per m. . . . Eaton's Fabric Shop, 382-7141, loc. 233.

Check that circuit box

By A. J. HAND

Q — I am thinking of installing a sauna in my basement, and if possible, I would like to use an electric heater. That way, I won't have to worry about venting off exhaust fumes as I would with a gas heater. How can I find out if my house wiring has enough capacity to take the extra circuit I would need to run the sauna? — D.F., Clifton, N.J.

A — Go down in your basement and look at your service panel (the box with all the circuit breakers in it). It will look something like the box shown in the sketch. If the box is all filled up with circuit breakers, the service panel has been wired to capacity. You can't add another circuit without some advanced wiring work.

But if there are some unused breaker positions still left in the box you are in luck. Most electric sauna heaters are 240 volts so you'll need two open positions, not just one.

Q — I recently turned my garage into a spare bedroom. The ceilings are gypsum board which I installed and taped by myself. I thought I did a careful job, but now that I have painted the ceiling, the taped seams are quite noticeable under some lighting conditions. I guess I will have to try to smooth things out with more wallboard compound. Can I put that material on over the paint, or do I have to sand the paint off first? — R.J., Moline, Ill.

A — No need to remove the old paint; wallboard compound will stick to it with no problem. Smooth taping takes real skill, however. In fact, a lot of professional builders hire specialists to do their taping. You might be able to save yourself a lot of work by simply repainting the ceiling with a textured "sand" paint. This stuff contains tiny bits of grit (usually perlite) that gives it a pleasing sandy texture. If your tape joints aren't too bad, that texture should be enough to make those seams disappear.

Q — Back in February, you wrote a column on underground home construction. You mentioned that there are architects who specialize in this type of construction. We are interested in securing the names and addresses of such architects who are located in the northeastern part of the country. Can you help? — M.K., Sugarloaf, Pa.

A — It seems a lot of readers are looking for this kind of information. The best place I know of to find underground architects and builders is the American Underground Space Assn., Dept. of Civil and Mineral Engineering, University of Minn., Minneapolis, Minn. 55455. You can write to them for a list of designers and builders.

If you've been suspicious about the quality of less expensive generic (non-brand) canned and bottled foods or paper goods, give this study report some thought: Most generic purchasers tend to be age 35-44 in larger families with higher incomes and above-average education.

While school clothes are still new, examine hems, seams, buttonholes for dangling threads. Knot or handstitch these threads and the kids are less likely to come home with opened seams, loose hems that tear easily. Buttons on jackets are less likely to be lost or tear the fabric underneath if the outer buttons are backed with smaller buttons sew onto the jacket front facing.

When tempted to answer an ad from a distant city about all the money you could earn doing work in your own home, consider this: with unemployment on the rise, why would a company need workers so far away from their office? Homework schemes are often a come-on for selling information and instructions that seldom help you earn money, says a consumer problem solver.

Injection is completed before pet gets point

By DR. FRANK MILLER

DEAR DR. MILLER: Which would be less painful for my dog, a shot in the shoulder or a shot in the behind? — T.P.

DEAR T.P.: A shoulder injection is generally subcutaneous (just under the skin). With such an injection, little is involved except the skin, and its penetration is the primary sensation felt unless, of course, the material being injected stings. Most of the "stingers" however, are given intramuscularly, deep in the muscle tissue, usually in the heavy upper thigh muscles. Here the needle not only penetrates the skin but considerable muscle tissue. This deeper injection, then, is likely to produce more discomfort. This, plus the fact that most irritating substances that must be injected are given intramuscularly, means that, of the two, subcutaneous or intramuscular, the latter is on the average slightly more uncomfortable.

This is relative, however, since in the vast majority of cases the injection is completed and the stinging sensation, if any, is over with almost before the punctured pet has gotten the point.

DEAR DR. MILLER: Most people take our 18-pound black Persian with a big frame for a small dog when they first see him. He's leash-trained, never gets off of it outside and is a good car traveller. The doctor said at his yearly checkup that he had a heart murmur. How long can Spook live with such a condition? — D.D.

DEAR D.D.: Your own veterinarian can best give you the answer to this one. It depends on a lot of factors, including Spook's general condition, the care and treatment he receives and, of course, the severity of the heart condition. A heart murmur may be so mild that it is of little significance, or it can be so severe, it signals (with related signs) rapid heart deterioration.

Should Spook fit into the former category, he could be good for many years yet.

DEAR DR. MILLER: The kids lost interest in the bird feeders so I have taken over the chores of keeping the feeders full. I don't want to let the birds down who are depending on them, but I'd rather be fishing. How soon can I safely "forget" to fill the feeders? — W.H.

DEAR W.H.: Just how long those feathered free-loaders really need your handouts depends mostly on the climate. As long as there is freezing weather or frequent cold storms, those suet/seedy snacks should be available.

DEAR DR. MILLER: What's the best feeding temperature for Dipsaurus dorsalis? I have tried him at temperatures from 75 to 92 and it's no go. — F.N.

DEAR F.N.: Desert iguanas (Dipsaurus dorsalis) generally prefer that temperatures around snack time be in the 90-degree range. Sunlight, or at least an artificial ultraviolet substitute, may stimulate the appetite, assuming other conditions such as humidity, privacy, food, etc., are all acceptable. It is possible, of course, your fasting iguana is actually ill and needs professional help.

DEAR DR. MILLER: Rather than ask my own veterinarian what might be a dumb question — is there any kind of injection which can sterilize a male dog? No details needed. If it is "Yes," I'll ask my own doctor. — T.O.

DEAR T.O.: Yes.

Divorce insurance next?

MONTREAL (CP) — Want to buy some divorce insurance?

Although it might be a difficult thing to sell to a starry-eyed young couple fresh from the altar, it's something insurance companies are going to have to consider if they want to keep in step with changes in society, says Claude Garcia.

Garcia, vice-president of Hebert, Le Houillier et Associes Inc., an actuarial consulting firm, is preparing a study on the changing structure of the family for the next convention of the International Association of Actuaries, scheduled for Zurich in 1980.

His work so far has shown him that either divorce or a woman's decision to raise a child alone, rather than the death of a spouse, are the main factors behind the emergence of single-parent families.

But, he adds, insurance companies have yet to recognize that a divorced woman can have as many financial needs as a widow.

And he says his study shows women are often unable to participate in company pension plans because they occupy the lower rungs on the corporate ladder.

For the increasing number of women re-entering or remaining in the work force, that can mean facing a considerable drop in income after retirement.

"The emergence of the single-parent family and the working woman's desire to be guaranteed a certain standard of living at her retirement should incite life insurance companies to adapt themselves better to the new reality and offer 'products' oriented towards the financial security of today's woman," says Garcia.

Back in the days when the husband was usually a family's sole bread-winner, insurance policies were tailored to give the wife a steady income in the event of her husband's death.

But, says Garcia, "The life insurance needs of a family in which both partners have a stable job are not the same as those of a family that counts almost entirely on the husband for its financial security.

"The increasing participation of women in the work force changes the role life insurance can play."

So does the climbing divorce rate.

Recent federal figures show that in 1974, there were 201 divorces per 100,000 inhabitants in Canada. This compares with 36 per 100,000 in 1961 and 6.4 per 100,000 in 1921.

About two per cent of all family heads in Canada now are divorced, and Garcia says that represents a four-fold increase in 10 years.

Also, the number of out-of-wedlock births now varies between eight and 10 per cent in the different regions of Canada, and 90 per cent of all unwed mothers are choosing to bring up their children themselves.

Garcia, who until last year was Quebec's assistant deputy minister of social affairs, says that between 1973 and 1978 the number of families headed by a single parent and receiving social assistance nearly doubled, reaching 19 per cent of all families receiving aid.

"Up till now, we haven't been able to find equivalent mechanisms to guarantee a secure income for single-parent families headed by a divorced or unmarried person. The women concerned have had to fall back on the government as soon as they found they couldn't meet their needs through their own means.

But Garcia acknowledges: "Insurers hesitate to offer income protection in case of divorce. It would lead to an increase in premiums at a time when the market is already very competitive.

"Also, the principle could be debatable because there's a human control on the risk in question."

He suggests that one solution could be selling group divorce insurance, thus eliminating the necessity of selling policies to individual couples.

"Unless the private sector comes up with a formula to guarantee income security for families whose head is divorced or unmarried, we will have to expect increased government intervention," he warns.

As for pension plans, Garcia notes that while 52 per cent of all working Canadian males participate in private pension plans, only 33 per cent of all working women do. And they aren't gaining on the men, either.

Not only that, but in many sectors where there is a high proportion of female employees, such as banks, restaurants and the textile industry, there are no group insurance or pension plans.

"Women who have obtained a certain degree of financial independence by working won't want to give it up at retirement age," he says.

"And if woman temporarily leaves her job to have a child, she will find it more and more difficult to accept having to start at zero when she goes back on the job market."

U. K. sought atomic blast

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — The U.S. and Britain jointly conducted an underground nuclear test Wednesday at the Nevada test site. The energy department said the test was requested by the British government and was in the yield range of between 20 and 150 kilotons.

Dear Abby

by Abigail Van Buren

Three little words again

DEAR ABBY: Some time ago you ran a letter from a busybody who was frustrated because she couldn't figure out what her new neighbors were up to. She claimed they were ruining the neighborhood.

You put her in her place with a three-word answer that wiped me out! Please dig it up and run it again. This country could use a good laugh right now. Thanks.

CHARLIE

DEAR CHARLIE: Is this it?

DEAR ABBY: About four months ago, the house across the street was sold to a "father and son" — or so we thought.

We later learned it was an older man about 50 and a young fellow about 24.

This was a respectable neighborhood before this "odd couple" moved in. They have all sorts of strange-looking company. Men who look like women, women who look like men, blacks, whites, Indians. Yesterday I even saw two nuns go in there!

They must be running some sort of business, or a club. There are motorcycles, expensive sports cars and even bicycles parked in front and on the lawn. They keep their shades drawn so you can't see what's going on inside but they must be up to no good, or why the secrecy?

We called the police department and they asked if we wanted to press charges! They said unless the neighbors were breaking some law there was nothing they could do.

Abby, these weirdos are wrecking our property values! How can we improve the quality of this once-respectable neighborhood?

UP IN ARMS

DEAR UP: You could move.

DEAR ABBY: We are having a disagreement at our house and you are elected to settle it. One of our family feels that when walking our puppy we should get dressed and not go out in our night clothes. The puppy isn't house-trained yet and has to go out often.

The person who thinks the dog-walker should be fully dressed never walks the dog, so I don't see why he has any say in the matter.

We live in the suburbs where hardly anyone walks by who would really care if he sees a 12-year-old girl in her bathrobe.

DECENT IN HER BATHROBE

DEAR DECENT: Bathrobes are for indoors. Better slip into some outdoor clothes when walking the dog.

DEAR ABBY: I caught a cold in my back, but instead of going to my regular acupuncturist, who is a noted lecturer and author, I went to another acupuncturist who stuck 40 gold needles in my back.

Then I went back to my regular acupuncturist who told me I should get a lawyer and sue the man who put 40 needles in my back because he broke every rule of acupuncture.

Then I went to Kaiser Hospital and they said trying to remove those needles would be like going on a fishing expedition, and I would be better off leaving them in.

Abby, I've had these needles in my back for two and a half years, and I'd like to get them out. They are playing havoc with my system.

NEEDLED

DEAR NEEDLED: Get another opinion. And a third if necessary. But stick with qualified, conventional, medical doctors — unless you don't mind being stuck again.

DEAR ABBY: Bravo to the TWO SUNKEN TREASURES IN NORTHBRIDGE for learning to laugh at their "Great Depressions."

We here in Seattle are considering starting our own "Bosomless Buddies" chapter. We have learned to be grateful for what we have, and to quit worrying about what we don't have.

Underdevloped women of the world, unite! Be proud. And remember, "Flat Is Beautiful!"

MICHELLE

DEAR MICHELLE: Right on, sister! Although you probably have no bras to burn, you're obviously way out in front for women's lib.

YOUR HEALTH

by L. L. Coleman, MD

On a late-night radio program, a doctor was answering questions from people who called in. He was described as a "cancer diagnostician." My doctor says that there is no such classification. Do you agree with this? — Mrs. J. W. N.

DEAR MRS. N.:

I agree with your doctor. There is no medical specialty that is designated as a "cancer specialist" or a "cancer surgeon." All physicians, when they examine patients, accumulate as much information as they can before coming to a conclusion or diagnosis. Similarly, all surgeons in all specialties operate on cancers in their own fields.

For example, a "general surgeon" will operate on a cancer of the stomach or the intestine. He will also remove all bladders and appendices and do all other operations within the limit of his specialty.

There are some specialists who devote themselves to unique types of operations. Heart surgery and pediatric surgery both fall in this category. But there are no surgeons who are specifically classed as "cancer surgeons."

Family physicians diagnose and treat problems in all areas of the body. Should they suspect that a cancer exists, they will refer the patient to doctor or surgeon who specializes in that particular area of the body.

My son is eight years old and for the past three years has had seizures similar to those of an epileptic. It was suggested that the problem was due to low blood sugar, so a high protein diet was prescribed. Now they say that an encephalogram study should be done, but it will be a month before we can have an appointment. Do you know a hospital where they specialize in such illnesses? — Mrs. P. M.

DEAR MRS. M.:

It is difficult to believe that the electro-encephalogram studies have not been suggested during the three years that your son has had convulsions. I am truly confused by your statement that there was an attempt to treat these convulsive seizures with a high-protein diet.

The routine in such cases is to have a complete neurological examination, including the EEG, or brain wave, test. There are also a variety of other tests that can definitively establish the diagnosis. When once this is made, one of the many drugs that are now available to control such seizures can be prescribed.

Most of these tests can be done in your local community under the guidance of your own doctor. I can understand how anxious you are and waiting a month increases that anxiety.

The spread of civilization generally results in the disappearance of many animals from parts of their former ranges. However, this has not been the case with the wily coyote.

During the period of recorded history, this mammel has actually succeeded in extending the frontiers of his territory. Once confined to the western plains, the coyote now inhabits a broad front that stretches from the Yukon in the north, to Central America in the south.

Perhaps the best-known trait of the coyote is its high-pitched howling. This howling is usually heard at dusk or dawn, and can involve several coyotes in the same vicinity. Most scientists agree that the howling is a method of cummunication but are not certain as to its exact significance.

You can obtain an in-depth look at the coyote, by writing to the Scientific and Technical Publications Section, Canadian Wildlife Service, Ottawa, Ontario K1A 0E7. Ask for the free folder entitled, Coyote.

Women's shelter busy place

TORONTO (CP) — Women's Habitat, an emergency shelter for women and children, has been busy since it opened here last November. A spokesman for the shelter said 137 mothers and 290 children had used it for periods of up to six weeks during its first six months. The time spent there gives mothers the opportunity to reorganize their lives with the help of hostel staff.

Alpha, Beta, Gamma: Which type are you?

By VICTOR COHN
Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Almost everybody fits into one of three basic personality groups, almost from the moment of birth, some authorities believe.

"Alphas" are the slow, solid type. "Betas" are spontaneous, active, outgoing.

"Gammas" are moody, irritable, often demanding, often brilliant yet often mixed up and confused.

And gammas suffer far more early death and disease, including cancer, heart disease and emotionaly troubles, than other personality types, a John Hopkins research team has reported.

The finding, the researchers say, represents the first time anyone has linked premature death and disease to inborn temperament, the distincition personality traits that are often seen even in newborn babies.

The finding was also a surprise to the John Hopkins scientists, Drs. Barbara Betz and Caroline Thomas.

In a project unique in the medical world, Dr. Thomas has been following the health of Hopkins medical graduates since 1948. She is currently keeping track of 1,337 graduates of classes from 1948 to 1964.

A few years ago Betz, a psychiatrist, re-examined the psychological records and up-to-date histories of the first 45 students — 43 men and two women — in the class of '48. They are now for the most part practicing doctors in their late 50s.

Betz classified eight as alphas. In more detail, this means people who are in more or less degree: cautious, equable or steady, well-oriented. They are people who take in the whole situation then work away at a part at a time, who take in new things gradually but adjust and who ask little and depend on themselves.

She classed 15 as betas: generally rapid, bright and clever, blithe, lighthearted, relating to the present rather than worrying about the future, adapting well, not demanding but articulate in voicing what they do ask.

She classed 22 as the more complicated gammas: irregular and uneven, often brilliant, yet either over-cautious or under-cautious, over-demanding or under-demanding, moody, often mixed and confused before adjusting to new situations. They are persons who "take in too much or too little" and "hold on for too long," who are either "well in focus or far out of focus."

Among these up-and-down gammas, 17 or 77 per cent had suffered various disasters or disorders: suicides, mental illnesses or lesser emotional disturbances, cancers, high blood pressure, heart attacks.

Among the slow but solid alphas, only 25 per cent and among the blithe, quick betas, only 26 per cent had such incidents.

Eager to check these striking results, Dr. Thomas extracted the records of 127 male graduates from the classes of 1949 through 1964.

Their records showed 64 were healthy, 63 had developed some problem. Thomas then asked Betz to classify the 127 by personality, without telling Betz which were healthy and which weren't.

Of Betz' newly designated gammas, it turned out, 61.7 per cent still feel into the group with the most serious disorders, compared with 46 per cent of the alphas and 33 per cent of the betas.

In short, say the doctors in the current Johns Hopkins Medical Journal, more studies are needed to establish the facts, but there may be an inborn "thread of vulnerability — or invulnerability — running through all our lives.

What can a gamma — or someone who thinks he or she is a gamma — do about it?

First, Dr. Thomas said, don't worry too much: "Gammas aren't all that different. They don't have a 50-50 chance of a premature disorder. They have maybe a 5 or 10 per cent chance. Whatever they are, most people live a full length of life."

Second, she said, inborn temperament is at most only one determinant of disease. Others may include smoking, alcoholism, obesity, exposure to stress and other elements of lifestyle that are usually subject to some control.

Dr. Betz — now a Kaiser health plan doctor in Los Angeles though still connected with John Hopkins — said, "The most sensible thing you can do is understand yourself, and try to find people who will let you be yourself."

And society — and parents, she said — need "to begin to think about a person's individuality, and assist that person according to his own innate temperament instead of trying to mold him."

Sex change qualifies: judge

NEW YORK (AP) — A New York state Supreme Court judge has ruled that sex-change operations are legitimate and necessary medical expenses covered by standard employee medical insurance.

Justice Louis Grossman directed Aetna Life and Casualty Insurance Co. to pay for the sex-change operation of Victoria Lee Davidson, 35, of Wappingers Falls, N.Y., an Oxford Chemicals technical sales engineer formerly known as Henry Dee Sampler.

Aetna, which administered the company's medical insurance plan, contended that the sex-change operation was "cosmetic surgery" and therefore was not covered in the health plan.

However, Justice Grossman said the evidence in the case indicated that for the woman "to live a normal life, sex reassignment surgery is imperative and necessary."

Such surgery, Grossman said, requires "extensive modification and realignment" of the body and psyche.

"It is performed to correct a psychological defect and not to improve muscle tone or physical appearance" and therefore is not cosmetic, the judge ruled.

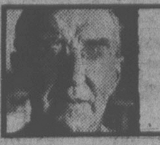
Time to aerate those tawdry lawns



GARDENING
Jack Beastall

Lawns have become almost a status symbol in modern society, yet the area sown to grass is the most time-consuming part of any garden, and to keep that area in near-perfect condition requires considerable expenditure for proper preparation and annual upkeep.

Grass was originally used to provide a ground cover for large areas devoid of any plant growth that could conceal the approach of an enemy to a castle.

It was more or less a coincidence that the vast area of emerald green was an ideal setting for the massive structure of rough and hewn stone.

This setting excited all the renowned garden designers, no layout for an estate being considered reasonable unless a wide expense of lawn surrounded the domicile.

From feudal days, through the leisurely Victorian era, right down to the last quarter of the 20th century, every student of landscaping has been taught the importance of a lawn, even though our present lawns are too small to provide any enhancement to a one-storey dwelling on a 60- to 120-foot lot.

Nevertheless, our pocket handkerchief lawns must remain, causing more worry, complaints and questions than any or all of the other beautiful plants which make the garden.

Although lawns on the Pacific Coast are visible and growing for 12 months of the year, the only time we become concerned is when we use them in summer and become ashamed of their tired, worn-out appearance.

The immediate reaction is to fertilize, weed spray and water in the vain hope of rejuvenating the turf we have neglected for the other 10 months of the year. Obviously, the crash treatment has no lasting effect.

September is as good a time as any to start a scheduled lawn improvement program that will improve the soil, strengthen the plants and have a lasting effect if religiously followed.

First we have to realize that what we call a lawn is actually a concentration of hundreds of individual plants to every square metre of soil.

Each plant needs light, sunshine or shade according to the type of grass, free circulation of air and plenty of room for top growth and root extension.

In short, the requirement of each grass plant is the same as that of a rhododendron, apple tree or lettuce. The main difference in cultivation is our habit of cutting off the new growth on the grass plants as fast as it is made, thus reducing the plant's ability to make food and preventing the natural discarding of worn-out parts which would add humus and nutrients to the soil around the roots.

To offset this method of culture we compensate by aerating the soil, top-dressing with humus, feeding heavily with fertilizer and artificially supplying water on a regular schedule.

The first step in improving the present turf will be to loosen the compacted soil to allow air, nutrients and water to enter. This is called aerating and can be done on a one-lot lawn with hand tools or with a rented power machine on half-acres or more.

The simplest hand tool, and one found in most gardener's tool kits, is a four- or five-tined digging fork. The tines are pressed four- to five-inches into the soil at a spacing of about six inches, the handle swung backwards and forwards to enlarge the holes and stir the soil below.

A more efficient tool is a device which removes small plugs of turf about one-half inche in diameter and three inches deep.

This machine is operated by the foot the same as the digging fork and is fitted with an ejector which releases the plugs on the surface of the grass for gathering and composting.

The half-inch holes permit air to penetrate the surface for stimulating root growth and also provide quick drainage for winter rainfall.

After the plugs have been gathered, spread about a ¼-inch of clean sand over the lawn, rake carefully, then push into the holes with a stiff stable broom or corn broom. Well-rotted, year-old manure can be screened and mixed with the sand.

Feeding the grass plants to strengthen them for the coming winter is the next step. If the job is done this coming week we can use the 10-4-7 or 10-6-4 fertilizer mix made especially for coastal lawns and soil conditions. Rate of application is given on the containers.

Should the work be delayed until near the end of the month, a 6-8-6 mix is better because its lower nitrogen content will not have the same stimulating effect on grass growth late in the season.

The grass should be dry when the fertilizer is applied and watered by an assistant as the work progresses to prevent fertilizer burn on the foliage.

The seeding of a new lawn should be done within the next 10 days of September, while summer warmth is in the soil to assist germination. Once grass seed becomes dampened it must have the ideal conditions for germinating within 12 days or it will rot. The longer seed sowing is delayed the less chance of a good take and of having established plants before the growing season ends.

Reconditioning an established lawn by seeding poor areas should also be done this coming week.

Mosses are a group of plants that thrive in our climate. They grow wherever the soil is too poor to support higher forms of plants.

Four species of moss invade our local lawns. Two thrive in open dry soil and two in damp shaded soil. Their appearance in a lawn indicates the soil is depleted and unable to nourish even grass plants.

Aerating, top-dressing in spring, three applications of 10-4-7 or 10-6-4 complete lawn fertilizer (on first of April, June and on Labor Day), and sulphate of ammonia every 30 days between the applications, will restore an impoverished soil over a period of three years and enable the grass plants to successfully swamp out the moss.

While chemicals are available for killing moss they do not eliminate it because they cannot rectify the cause. Only by rebuilding the fertility of the soil and maintaining that state of fertility, can we eliminate moss.

Weeds in a newly sown lawn come from seeds in the soil which were not germinated before the grass was sown. These must be removed by hand as soon as noticed. No weed killers should be used on a new lawn before the final turf has developed in the third year after sowing.

Weeds in an established lawn come from seeds floating on air currents and carried on clothing, shoes and pets. They flourish because the soil is poor and the grass unable to smother the seedlings.

If you wish to risk using weed killers on an established lawn remember one application only in late April or early May is the limit. More frequent applications have resulted in gradual deterioration of the grass plants.

Many lawns are ruined by faulty cutting. During periods of rapid growth (spring and fall) the grass needs cutting every third day removing only one-sixteenth of an inch from the tips of the grass blades. The usual once-a-week mowing exposes too much immature leaf surface to sun resulting in severe scorching.

Any gardener can be the owner of a perfect lawn who cares to work for it, but most of us have other ways of filling our time, therefore must be content with temporary measures taken when the appearance of the grass offends our senses.

Work for week

Order bulbs for spring flowering, evergreen and deciduous trees and shrubs to plant towards end of month into October.

Early in month bring in tender houseplants such as poinsettia, fibrous begonia, tropical foliage plants which have summered outdoors. They must be in before first frost even though a light one; and they need to have house windows still open and be two weeks without heating system.

This weekend sow a few early type looseleaf lettuce such as Cos or Romaine, Curly Endive, Corn-salad, Swiss Chard — all for use through winter and early spring. Give sunny, protected spot.

Place sticky bands on fruit and other deciduous trees to trap female moths ascending trunks. These are source of small caterpillars emerging in young tip growth in spring, resulting in stripping leaves.

Lift a few potatoes at a time, choosing those with naturally dried foliage. Plan to lift main crop in a future dry spell.

September and October flowers on balcony, deck or patio are possible: buy in flower the blue Gentiana sino-ornata and Schizostylis coccinea or its variety the pink "Mrs. Hegarty" — both lovely and long-lasting perennial plants.

U.K. salutes green thumbs

LONDON (LAT) — The national pastime in Britain is neither cricket nor rugby. It is gardening.

Britons have been gardening for a thousand years. Every other man and woman seems to have a green thumb.

To celebrate what amounts to a national institution, the English Tourist Board has decreed 1979 "The Year of the Garden." Historic floral parks and formal gardens, among them Blenheim Palace and Henry VIII's Hampton Court, have been restored, and about 3,000 private gardens have been opened to the public.

No one quite knows why the British are such uniquely determined and gifted gardeners. But it was the Romans who started it all. During their occupation in the first century they brought in almond, cherry, chestnut, fig, mulberry and peach trees, grape vines, radishes, lettuce and medicinal herbs.

English gardening is credited with coming into its own around the year 1,000.

At that time there were fewer than 100 varieties of plants being cultivated in Britain. These included the madonna lily and the rose, as well as the iris, the poppy, sage and sweet bay.

Meanwhile, British explorers have combed the world and brought back exotic plant specimens.

Many garden implements were developed in Britain, including the lawn mower, which was designed in the early 19th century by an engineer who got the idea from watching a spiral-blade machine cut fabric in a textile factory.

41 refugees rescued

TEL AVIV (Reuter) — An Israeli merchant vessel rescued 41 Vietnamese refugees in the South China Sea on Thursday after their boat sank in a storm, Israel radio said. The 6,066-ton container ship, Zim Sydney, responded to a message sent by a U.S. plane which spotted the refugees drifting in a lifeboat, the report said. The Israeli ship continued on its voyage to Singapore.

Industrialists visit

KUALA LUMPUR (AP) — Ten Ontario industrialists will arrive here Sept. 13 for a four-day visit to study trade possibilities, new markets, and investigate joint venture possibilities. A Canadian high commission statement said Thursday the mission represents the wheat, tobacco, soyabean and other industries.

Mainly just how d'ya do on U.S.-Soviet hotline

By JIM MORRIS

FREDERICK, Md. (UPI) — Jim Phillips sits in front of a computer console 8 hours a day performing a routine, somewhat boring job on what could be the world's most crucial communications device — the "hotline" between Washington and Moscow.

Once every 6 hours, Phillips or one of four other technicians at Fort Detrick will "talk" via teleprinter to their counterparts in Moscow on matters considerably less urgent than the future of world peace.

"Hello, esteemed colleagues," a recent message from Russia began. "We receive you excellently. All is in order. How do you receive us?"

Phillips replied, "Greetings, friends. We receive you well. All is in order. We wish you all the best."

The messages seem routine.

There is no mystery surrounding the "hotline," no specter of the president calling Moscow to forestall a nuclear holocaust, no similarity to the tense image of Henry Fonda picking up the red telephone in the movie "Fail Safe."

In fact, there is not even a red telephone.

Visitors to the Fort Detrick "hotline" office usually look for a red telephone — or any telephone, for that matter — but the hotline has been a teleprinter since it was first installed in 1963.

Then, the system used transatlantic cables and terminated in the bowels of the Pentagon. The equipment was quickly outdated by new technology and the original "hotline" printer now sits in the Smithsonian Institution.

The "hotline" was moved in 1974 to Fort Detrick, about 45 miles northwest of Washington, to better accommodate the modern equipment and antennas.

"The system is being constantly updated," said Lt. Col. Arthur J. Downey, who heads the East Coast Telecommunications centre at the Army base 55 miles northwest of Washington. "Most of this equipment was installed in 1974, but a lot of it has changed since then."

Two 60-foot wide dish antennas bounce signals off a Soviet-made Molniya satellite to antennas in Moscow. The antennas switch to different satellites every six hours, necessitating brief communications between the capitals of the Soviet Union and the United States.

The Fort Detrick "hotline" sends and receives messages in Russian. A backup-system in Edam, W.Va., uses the American Intelsat satellite and does its "talking" in English.

When the leaders of the two countries "speak" through the teleprinters, their messages are in their own language, primarily to insure accuracy.

If the President wanted to converse with the Soviet premier, a link would be established between Fort Detrick and the Pentagon, where communications experts could patch in the President no matter where he was.

The system at Fort Detrick is operated and maintained by the Harris Corp., a Melbourne, Fla., communications company.

The only uniforms in the gray, one-storey building on the base are the white coveralls worn by the Harris interpreters.

Harris hires all the technicians and interpreters, including Phillips, who came here from graduate school.

"It's not a bad job, although it's not very exciting," he said. "The technical words get you at first, but it's not too bad after that."

Although the interpreters are not military personnel, security is tight and armed military guards are right across the street and the only entrance to the building is electronically operated.

"You couldn't get in here unless we knew you were coming," said Jim Offner, Harris' chief engineer. "We can seal off this entire compound from the rest of the base if we had to."

Phillips and the other "hotline" operators are allowed to leave their desks during their shifts, but must stay in the compound. Some jog around the fenced-in areas, while others read.

Offner said the Russian linguists in Moscow may have the same routine, but no American has ever gotten close enough to find out. A Russian team got a close-up look at the Fort Detrick facility several years ago during its development, but no American military personnel have been invited to Moscow.

"The Russians are very secretive about what they're doing," he said. "We have tours through here, for example, school kids and tourists, but there is no way you could get that close to the one in Moscow.

"It's not only that. They tend to tell us only the things we need to know, and sometimes not even that. Occasionally, they will switch satellites without telling us, and then our antennas will have to just guess where it is in the sky."

No one knows for sure when the President used the hotline last. Any messages that comes from the White House Communications Agency are encrypted, including test messages.

Most of the communication on the hotline seems mundane.

"The handover went well," the Fort Detrick station messaged recently after a change of satellites. "We wish you well. Till link-up."

Moscow replied, "Thanks for the message. Till we meet."

Great Hall for rent

PEKING (Reuter) — China has a large room to rent to foreigners wishing to hold cocktail parties — The Great Hall of the People. The official Chinese news agency Xinhua (Hsinhua) said Thursday that embassies, foreign guests and delegations visiting China can book the Great Hall "for banquets, cocktail parties and receptions." The hall, where the People's Congress meets, has a banquet hall that can seat 5,000.

Patmos, the island in the Dodecanese, where the Apocalypse was written

On Patmos monks sell wine

By BETTY PEACH

The Island of Pilgrimage attracts many tourists. They climb the steep hill to the monastery known for its great library.

"The isle that is called Patmos . . . and before the throne there was a sea of glass like unto crystal . . .," says St. John the Devine in Revelations, last book of the New Testament.

The biblical John was among the earliest visitors to Greece whose writings have endured. In his devotion to his cause, he made only passing reference to the setting, but there are occasional glimpses of sunshine, vineyards and the sea.

Today, a Greek Orthodox monastery sits atop the highest hill in Patmos, a white plaster crown above terraced vineyards. Near the crest are stone caves. One is identified as the probable residence of John during his stay.

Monks in the monastery make wine to sell to visitors. Many an American tourist has made the journey up the 835-foot hill on the back of a plodding donkey, and descended the same way, carefully clutching a bottle of the local wine.

Patmos is in the Eastern Aegean closer to the coast of Turkey — 35 miles — than to the Greek capital of Athens, 165 miles to the west.

It is one of more than 400 islands that make up a fifth of the total area of Greece, which is a little smaller than Alabama.

Greece has attracted visitors for centuries, for it was a centre of civilization and culture long before tourism was a principal industry.

It has hundreds of antiquities that are still in use, often in the original manner. The stone amphitheatres tucked into natural curves in hills are filled each summer when Greek drama is performed, as in Epidavros, about 60 miles west of Athens.

Ancient stone temples stand in ruin throughout the country, many in good condition. But those in Athens, subjected to the air pollution of the city, are deteriorating at an accelerated pace. Some have been closed to visitors, and others are being protected. Especially valued treasures will be removed to museums, and replicas put in their places.

Greece is unique in its combination of attractions. Its traditions and history are sufficient to attract and hold thousands of visitors.

For the lazy, it offers the longest sandy coastline in all of Europe, hundreds of sheltered coves interrupted by rocky promontories.

Legend has it that Mount Olympus, at 9,550 feet the highest point of land, was created when assailants hurled rocks at Zeus. None hit him, naturally, but they piled up to form the mountain, and those that slid off fell into the sea to form islands.

The mainland offers mountain ridges, seasonally swift rivers and numerous lakes that may dry up in the summer sun. The rivers are torrents in the spring, but barely trickle the remainder of the year.

It is warm and dry in summer, moderate and balmy in spring and autumn, and cold and rainy only in January and February.

It offers modern conveniences for the traveller, including a growing number of elegant resorts along the shore.

It is almost impossible to get more than 40 miles from the sea anywhere in the sprawling country. Although there is little rainfall (officially, the sun shines more than 300 days a year), the country depends on agriculture as its principal industry.

It manufactures cotton fabric, thread, chemicals; makes wine and packs olives, oil and cheeses for export. Those and the growing tourism industry provide the other major sources of income.

Arts and crafts are available throughout the land, especially in Athens. They include works of silversmiths, hand-loomed rugs, embroidery and peasant clothing.

Greeks generally are friendly, outgoing people helpful to strangers and especially to visitors in their storied land. Sitting at a small table at one of the many tiny tavernas, sipping coffee and looking bewildered has been the first to move in a chess game of adventure. If a Greek offers to help, the game has only begun.

19th century gold-rush tavern today a national monument

By ANDREE BOSCH
and PAM JONES

JOHANNESBURG — South Africa's numerous national monuments range from the Cape's stately Table Mountain to an old railway tunnel and a 19th century Transvall gold-rush brothel.

The brothel, which was also famous as a pub, is today a neat and unpretentious little wood-and-iron house in Barberton, about 250 km east of Johannesburg.

It is one of the buildings that have survived from Barberton's early boom town days of the 1880s when gold was discovered nearby. Liquor stores, music halls and pubs proliferated, all competing with the mines to profit from the rich gold strikes.

This building, erected in 1887, was called the Globe Tavern. Two years ago a resident of Barberton, now a singularly tranquil and respectable little town, bought the dilapidated house and with the aid of old photographs undertook a magnificent job of restoration.

Barmaids were something of a feature of the early pubs and one of these employed by the Globe Tavern was known far and wide as Cockney Liz. Extremely attractive, witty and warm-hearted, she was the queen of Barberton's barmaids. It was her custom, at the end of an evening, to leap onto the bar and have herself auctioned to the highest bidder. There is a story about an unfortunate miner who tendered 100 Kimberley Imperial shares, then worth about R2000 ($2,800 Canadian at today's exchange rates), and won Liz for the rest of the night. Overcome by his good fortune, he celebrated too well and spent the night snoring on the barroom floor, alone. His shares were not returned.

The Globe Tavern, now a private home, was declared a national monument last March.

Another national monument in Barberton is the facade of one of the first stock exchange buildings in South Africa. The old building on Pilgrim Street is a reminder of the time when the region was the scene of feverish activity.

In 1873 alluvial gold was discovered at Spitskop, Mac Mac and Pilgrim's Rest. By 1882 these deposits were largely exhausted and prospectors and diggers began to search for new sources of gold farther afield. Some of them went into the Kaap Valley which then was so infested with malaria it was known as the Valley of Death. But this didn't keep the fortune-hunters out. One of them, Graham Hoare Barber discovered a rich gold-bearing reef on the eastern side of the valley in 1884. This attracted great numbers of diggers and the resulting settlement was called Barberton.

The town grew rapidly until its population reached about 20,000. Business undertakings flourished, including six hotels and four banks, and there was lively trading in shares. On Nov. 23, 1886 the first stock exchange in the Transvaal (and the second in South Africa) was established. It was called the Kaap Gold Fields Stock Exchange Limited and in April, 1887, it moved into an elegant new building of which only the walls still stand today.

With the discovery of the great Witwatersrand goldfield, the importance of Barberton dwindled. Business, including stock exchange activity, shifted to Johannesburg.

The rear portion of the old Kaap exchange was demolished in 1958 but the front portion was retained and restored by the municipality of Barberton. The commemorative bronze plaque adorning it was a gift from the Johannesburg Stock Exchange.

The NZASM Tunnel near Waterval Boven in the eastern Transvaal is another unusual national monument. It was built in 1892-93 for the old Transvaal Republic as part of the Dutch South African Railway Company's line from Lourenco Marques (now Maputo) to Pretoria and it is a curved tunnel, about 400 meters long. When the railway line was subsequently diverted over a longer route, the old tunnel was used for road traffic — until 1936. It is now a "museum piece" and sections of the old cog-railway have been preserved inside the tunnel.

Ex-N.Y. rabbi hounds Arabs

By MARION KWARTLER

JERUSALEM (AP) — Rabbi Meir Kahane, who once led the militant Jewish Defence League in New York City, now roams Israel with a bullhorn and a handful of followers in a campaign to drive out Arab residents.

He is spurned by the Israeli government, has been arrested many times and is sharply criticized by the Israeli news media because he wants to deport Arabs from Israel and the territories it occupies.

He was arrested in Nablus, in the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River, and was sentenced this week to three months imprisonment.

At 46 and with no major following, Kahane is waging a desperate battle for respectability. He was twice defeated in bids for a seat in the Knesset, Israel's parliament, but he runs daily advertisements in the local English-language press, billing himself as "the most exciting and dynamic Jewish leader of our times."

Getting elected to the Knesset would give him parliamentary immunity to arrest.

"I can be the same terrorist, the same hooligan but if I'm a member of parliament, I'll have respect," he says.

Preaching that the growing Arab birth rate in Israel is a "time bomb waiting to explode," Kahane claims to have compiled lists of Arab families ready for deportation and exhorts the Israeli government to provide them with visas and one-way tickets out.

He delivers his message to Arabs throughout the country and to groups of young American students at his newly-opened Jerusalem Museum of the Potential Holocaust.

Kahane emigrated to Israel with his wife and four children in 1971 because "you have to act on what you say." But he says he still is preoccupied with U.S. Jewry.

His museum occupies three rooms on the first floor of an old, Arab-style house in Jerusalem. It is filled with clippings from Ku Klux Klan and American Nazi party newspapers. The clippings, faded and crumbling, are identified by white index cards labelled Hard Core Hate.

"I believe there is a certain importance to hate. One has to hate injustice. You've got to burn it out."

His longest detention in Israel was 41 days in 1973 for trying to occupy a formerly Jewish-owned building in the Arab city of Hebron and declare a Jewish colony there.

Police attempts to bar him from Arab villages because they say the residents fear that Kahane's armed followers will become trigger happy.

"I'm not here to be loved," Kahane says. "People may not like to hear what I'm saying but I'm sure that there are plenty out there who agree with me even though they won't say so."

But some groups with similar sympathies say they are leery of him.

"We don't take his actions seriously," said Ben Gurarye, Prime Minister Menachem Begin's adviser on Arab affairs. "But he does cause damage by feeding extreme Arab views that his is an official Israeli attitude even though he has no connection with the government.

Object of "The Name Game": To become eligible for prize drawings by matching letters of the alphabet, published in the Victoria Times and The Daily Colonist, with the letters in your name. Each game starts with a Saturday Times and ends in the Sunday Colonist two weeks later. The official entry form will be published every day. All members of a family may play. There is no age limit. You may enter more than once but only one entry per envelope may be submitted. As each game ends, you are invited to play the next game.

1. Using the official entry form or a reasonably hand-drawn facsimile (no mechanically reproduced forms accepted), start at the upper left hand corner and print your name continuously, one letter in each square, until all the squares are filled in. (For example, if your name is John Anderson, Sample 1 shows how to fill out your entry form.) Do not include punctuation.
Use your legal name, in a form which can be verified on your driver's licence, social security card or other official identification. You may use various forms of your first name (e.g. John, Jonathan or John S.), as long as your identity can be verified. No nicknames, please.
2. Letters for the Name Game will be published as follows: 4 letters Saturday Times and Sunday Colonist and 3 letters daily. When an official letter matches one in your diagram, circle it on your entry. That letter may appear in more than one square on your diagram, but you may circle only one such letter (of your choice) each time. Since individual letters are selected at random, they may appear more than once — even on the same day. You may circle one such letter as many times as that letter is published. The same letters will be published in the Victoria Times and The Daily Colonist, but may only be used once in any one entry.
3. When you match enough letters to complete one row on your diagram — horizontal, vertical or diagonal (corner to corner), as in Sample 2, you are eligible for the prize drawings for that game. Drawings for 15 prizes will be held every other week for 10 weeks. At each drawing $500 goes to the first name drawn, $100 to the next —, $50 each to the next 3, and $25 for the last 10 — (Winners must answer a time-limited skill-testing question before collecting prizes.) All names drawn will be returned to the drum for the grand prize drawing.
4. Mail your completed entry form to: The Name Game, Victoria Press, P.O. Box 1390, Victoria, B.C. V8W 3C4; postmarked no later than the Monday following the end of that game. Completed entries may also be delivered, in a sealed envelope, to Victoria Press, no later than Tuesday, the following day. The game number (such as 'Game 1', 'Game 2', etc.) must appear at the lower left-hand corner of the envelope.
5. All entries will be placed in a container and the winning entries will be drawn at random. Winners will be announced in the Colonist and Times on the Friday following the close of each game. The odds of winning will depend on the number of eligible entries received.
6. It is not necessary to buy the Times or Colonist to participate. Copies of the newspaper may be inspected free of charge at the newspaper's offices during regular business hours. Sorry, official letters will not be given over the phone.
7. Employees of the newspapers and members of their immediate families are not eligible to participate. Unclaimed or invalidly claimed prizes will be donated to a recognized charity at the close of the contest.
8. Winners agree to allow publication of their names, pictures and publicity in the Times and Colonist without additional consideration. Submission of an entry indicates acceptance of all game rules.
9. Decisions of Victoria Press judges in all matters relating to the The Name Game will be final.

A top Russian doctor is real witchcraft fan

By BARTON REPPERT

MOSCOW (AP) — A top Russian medical specialist is urging that general practitioners in Africa's developing countries team up with tribal witch doctors to help combat the continent's widespread public health problems.

"The witch doctors should be made a channel for the spread of modern medical knowledge," says Prof. Fyodor Soprunov, chief of Moscow's institute of medical parasitology and tropical medicine.

His comments, appearing in a recent issue of the magazine New Times, are in contrast with the usual Soviet official line emphasizing coldly scientific Marxist materialism — while condemning all forms of religious cult and superstition.

And the new attitude appears to reflect a realistic assessment that in Africa — where hundreds of Russian and Soviet-bloc doctors are working under aid programs — today's thin network of mainly urban-based hospitals and clinics cannot hope to meet over-all health care needs.

Soprunov argues that enlisting the help of "traditional medicine" would make good sense "in the independent countries of Africa which lack the economic means, the necessary personnel and the experience needed to resolve effectively problems of health protection."

In the New Times article, Soviet journalist Boris Asoyan recounts how he himself had sought to visit a witch doctor in Uganda.

Asoyan concedes that he backed out when he wws told the local "mganga" (witch doctor) only would see him after he had gone through the standard ritual — having his head shaved and body annointed with special ointments to drive out evil spirits.

Nonetheless, he is even more enthusiastic than Soprunov about the prospects for a rational combination of modern medical practice and traditional African folk medicine.

"Perhaps the time is not far off when the medic in the white smock and the amulet-bedecked witch doctor will form an alliance in the name of the health of the African people," Asoyan writes.

Existing medical facilities, particularly in rural areas, are unable to serve the growing population, he notes.

"The sight of Africans waiting patiently in endless queues outside hospitals is painful to behold."

By exploiting the shortage of regular medical personnel, the writer maintains, "unqualified practitioners and outright quacks have built up a lucrative racket."

But he notes that African medical sources have recognized the success of witch doctors and other traditional healers in treating health problems ranging from chicken pox to various psychosomatic disorders.

Such folk medicine can be highly effective because sickness is often related not only to external factors but also to "disruption of the harmony of life," Asoyan says.

There is growing scientific interest in fathoming the secrets of the witch doctors' art as officials explore the possibility of merging some aspects of traditional medicine with the general health service.

In Kenya, the University of Nairobi's pharmacology department has been conducting research for more than a year into folk medicine cures. Also, seminars on witchcraft have been held at Witwastersrand University in Johannesburg.

Dr. Christo van den Heever of Baragwamath hospital in the black township of Soweto says a witch doctor has about as good a chance as his Western counterparts of curing psychological disorders.

Witch doctors also can display competence in setting fractures and alleviating pain, he adds.

A survey by South Africa's National Institute for Personnel Research has shown that 85 per cent of urban blacks regularly consult traditional practitioners.

Witchcraft and witch-doctoring remain officially illegal in many African countries despite the urgings of medical experts.

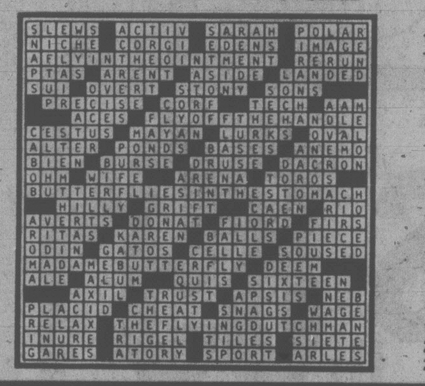
SOLUTION TO LAST WEEK'S PUZZLE



YOUR HOROSCOPE

Astrological Forecast for Sunday, September 2, 1979
By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (Mar. 21-Apr. 19): You receive communication which adds up to more responsibility, added opportunity, a valid chance to advance career. Gemini, Sagittarius persons figure in scenario. You receive news concerning leases, rentals or property values.

TAURUS (Apr. 20-May 20): Good Moon aspect indicates step-up in communication, an end to language barrier, positive "spiritual identification." Gemini, Sagittarius persons figure prominently. Expand horizons, display confidence in your own potential.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be sure, practical, aware of facts and figures. Leave speculative venture for another time. For now, stick to tried-and-true, be cognizant of track record, past performances. Stress reliability. Investment procedure is subject to variation.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Accent on public relations, image, legal counsel, the binding together of an agreement or relationship. Get views on record — protect ideas, be sure you get credit due. Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius persons figure prominently.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Go slow, maintain moderate pace. Avoid sensationalism. Co-operate with co-worker; build bridges of friendship. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio persons figure prominently. Keep resolutions concerning medical-dental appointments. One who loves you will prove it.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Spotlight on emotional response, variety, speculation, creative changes. Romance dominates — you learn difference between "sweet nothings" and responsible commitment. Young person confides problem. Be a good listener, remain open-minded.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You are repaid for past efforts; love, money and achievement form trio in your scenario. Cancer, Capricorn natives figure prominently. Build on secure base — reject the flimsy or short cut procedures. Remain on familiar ground.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Accent on short trip, special call, message or correspondence. Relative confides problem. Be receptive without becoming inextricably involved. Aries, Capricorn, Libra natives are likely to be involved. You get go-ahead to finish important project.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Make new start in new direction; stress originality, independence and willingness to love. Message should become crystal-clear! Leo plays key role. Emphasis on personal possessions, personality, increasing income potential.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You recoup recent loss. Confidence makes a comeback. Accent personal appearances, direct approach. Cancer native aids in resolving apparent legal or tax dilemma. You are going to be more emotionally and financially secure.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Look beyond the obvious or immediate — you are on brink of valuable discovery. Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius natives play significant roles. You'll deal in secrets, with hospital personnel and may be interviewed by the media.

PISCES (Feb. 19-Mar. 20): Accent on compensation resulting from business transaction. Aquarius, Leo, Scorpio persons figure prominently. Friendship is "proven." You are due for greater security and happiness. A wish is fulfilled.

IF SEPTEMBER 2 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY . . . you have an instinctive "feel" for bank accounts. You are acutely aware of security, have a fetish for paying bills on time. During 1979, you have valid chances for new starts, added independence, the leaving behind of "altruistic" burdens. July was memorable. In September, there are fresh contacts, an opening which permits you to be creative and earn a profit. You will be free to fall in love.

Monday, September 3, 1979

ARIES (MAR. 21-Apr. 19): Potential for joy replaces gloom. Accent on diversification, versatility and increased social activity. Gemini, Sagittarius individuals play important roles. You can win friends and influence people — more so than in recent past.

TAURUS (Apr. 20-May 20): Put theories into practice; you can successfully meet tests, challenges. Aim towards goals — be specific, thorough and familiar with source material. Superior is willing to make room for you. Some restrictions, delays actually will work in your favor.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Open lines of communication. Get ideas, concepts in writing. Imprint your own style. Member of opposite sex will aid in pursuit of an educational-publishing project. Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius natives figure in scenario.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Hidden costs rise to surface. Confer with one close to you regarding budget, investments and general financial prospects. Family member desires an accounting — financial and emotional. Message will become crystal-clear.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Efforts, products come under public scrutiny. Be positive concerning quotations and sources. Pisces, Virgo individuals figure prominently. Legal consultation may be necessary to detect contractual loopholes.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Steer clear of direct confrontation. Take ring roads to increase odds for success. Relationship is intensified — nothing is apt to occur halfway, it is all or nothing. Being aware of nutritional requirements will help you stand up under pressure.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Good lunar aspect coincides now with added charisma and winning ways. Significant changes occur which affect career and love life. Aries individual could aid in hurdling obstacles. Take a chance on your own judgment, capabilities. You'll win!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): New policy works in your favor where security is concerned. Get to heart of matters by expressing yourself in dynamic, independent fashion. Leo, Aquarius natives figure prominently. Older individual lends benefit of experience, aids in closing transaction.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): By following through on hunch, an idea becomes a viable concept. You may be pulled in two directions at once. Key is to be selective. Elevate self-esteem. One you respect will seek your counsel. The number 11 figures prominently.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Cash flow improves. You're able to see light at end of tunnel. What had been missing can now be located. Be flexible, willing to see picture as a whole. Investment, made as a lark, could pay significant dividends.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your position is stronger than might be apparent on surface. Cycle is high and your judgment, intuition is on target. Highlight independence of thought and action; apply "brush strokes" in direct, individual manner. Wear bright colors.

PISCES (Feb. 19-Mar. 20): Your extrasensory perception works overtime. You can be at right place at crucial moment. A clandestine conference could be on agenda. You unravel a mystery and make important advance as result. The number 5 figures in scenario.

IF SEPTEMBER 3 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY . . . wider vistas are due to open for you in October. You are perceptive enough to pounce on opportunity. Travel plays an important role in your life. You have tendency to be superficial and to scatter your forces. You are more aware of body image than the average person. Sense of humor often proves to be your saving grace.

Tuesday, September 4

ARIES (Mar. 21-Apr. 19): Emphasis on desire, friendship, willingness to stand tall for principles. Aquarius, Scorpio, Leo individuals figure prominently. An apparent "mild" relationship grows in intensity. You can win way through powers of persuasion.

TAURUS (Apr. 20-May 20): Where there was a lull, there now may be an abundance of opportunities. Accent on prestige, career, standing in commuity. Gemini helps you learn a secret. The number 5 figures prominently. You make definite gain via written word.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Perceive potential, welcome support by family, strive to restore domestic harmony. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio persons figure in scenario. Long-range project shows signs of life. Key is to communicate, to restablish valuable contacts.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Avoid self-deception; see places and people in realistic light. You get news concerning partnership and money. Pisces, Virgo natives play key roles. You have "experience" which borders on the occult.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Accent on solidifying plans, establishing position. Accept responsibility and challenge, but hold off on "drect assault." Older individual lends benefit of experience if you are patient, receptive. Marital status commands more-than-usual attention.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You can finish what has been "hanging on". Key is a moderate pace, steady approach, willingness to co-operate for overall good. Aries, Libra persons figure in scenario. One who depends upon you is ready to "return the favor".

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Strive for new starts, original approach, originality, independence, the courage to get to heart of matters. Good Moon aspect now coincides with change, creativity, children, emotional responses. Relationship is very warm!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Follow through on hunch, teach and learn, regain sense of purpose and direction. Cancer, Leo, Aquarius persons figure prominently. You learn about property, security and how better to obtan those "commodities."

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Ideas can emerge from what may apear to be a welter of confusion. Be adaptable, perceive potential, clear lines of communication. Gemini figures in scenario. Close relatives call, visit and make requests.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Spotlight on earnings, gathering needed material. Aquarius, Leo, Scorpio natives figure prominently. Obtain valid hint from Sagittarius message. You may go through a "tearing down" process for ultimate rebulding purpose.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Take initiative in bringing about changes. Trust your own judgment. Piece together bits of information — come up with "workable" script. Moon in your sign emphasizes appeals, special products and personality.

PISCES (Feb. 19-Mar. 20): You get more than you bargained for — in positive manner. Means excuses, fears are overcome. A "secret" is revealed. You perceive potential — you shake off shackles. You are more self-assertive and you gain strong support. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio persons figure prominently.

IF SEPTEMBER 4 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY . . . you are perceptive, rebellious, originai, determined, creative and stubborn. You may have been "missing" one or both parents at an early age. You have many ideas, talents, but you try too much at one time. Travel could be on agenda in September. An important change, involvng member of opposite sex, occurs in November.

Can't win this game — it's too much like life

By BETH ANN KRIER
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — "The first thing adults will ask about D&D (Dungeons & Dragons, a fantasy role-playing game) is 'How do you win?' Well, you don't win," explains hobby-shop owner Gary Switzer.

"In D&D, you don't win or lose. You survive and you learn from your mistakes and you have a good adventure. It's a lot like life."

Only more complicated, some would argue. For Dungeons & Dragons — D&D as it's known in its burgeoning subculture — is a frightfully complex, infinitely open-ended game that can be played with calculators and computers or with nothing but pencils, paper and a strange array of multi-sided dice.

A game board is optional, as are miniature lead representations of characters and pantomiming of their adventures. Even when it's played with a board and tokens, D&D is a game quite unlike chess or Monopoly. Some say it is actually more of a hobby, for it is not uncommon for enthusiasts to invest hundreds of dollars in D&D manuals and paraphernalia — despite the fact that the only real equipment one needs for play is intelligence and imagination.

Stamina comes in handy, too, for D&D is played for hours, weeks, even years at a time at intervals determined by players. The game is undertaken by students at universities such as Harvard and the California Institute of Technology, where a computer is sometimes used as a playing aid at the weekly Friday and Sunday night sessions. D&D is often pursued with even greater devotion by genius-level preteens and gifted teenagers, some of whom have also attempted to produce computer variants of D&D.

Serious stuff

This is serious stuff, which parents quickly deduce when they see children — who formerly spent their free time roller skating or disco dancing — suddenly preferring to read up on the Middle Ages. Or spending the days between games drawing labyrinthian dungeons, figuring the odds on contracting "dreaded rotting mummy disease" or devising historically accurate magic systems.

More than one mother has observed a distinctly depressed state overtake her child when a character nurtured through an extended campaign is killed off and there wasn't anybody around to raise him from the dead.

Some parents, whose children previously demonstrated little interest in reading, recall pleasant shock at finding their kids totally absorbed in a game whose "simplified," 48-page rule book requires an evening to read, generally longer to understand. D&D veterans say the original rules were virtually incomprehensible until they were edited by J. Eric Holmes, MD, a D&D player, novelist and associate professor of neurology at the University of California School of Medicine.

Even the manufacturer admits that the game as first marketed in 1974 was "so abstruse as to be able to be played only by persons with intelligence far above the norm" and required "a volume of preliminary work, which is prohibitive for the normal individual." D&D is no cakewalk in its revised form but Gary Gygax, the game's co-creator and manufacturer, estimates that about 250,000 Americans now play D&D, a disproportionate number of whom are Californians.

$10 just a start

Gygax's TSR Hobbies, headquartered in Lake Geneva, Wis., sells 5,000 to 6,000 copies of the basic, $10 D&D game kit each month. The basic set, however, is like a Barbie doll without any clothes and TSR has likewise profited on a vast assortment of advanced monster manuals, players' handbooks, adventure modules and other accessories.

Merchants who stock D&D merchandise report that their sales have been steadily increasing, particularly in the last year. Switzer of Aero Hobbies in nearby Santa Monica, Calif., for instance, specializes in fantasy and war game materials exclusively and reports his business has improved 40 per cent in the last year and 100 per cent in the last month, thanks largely to demand for D&D.

Players frequently participate in more than one continuous D&D game and if they serve as a dungeon master, the game's godlike referee, they must know all the rules and stay a few steps ahead of their players. Hence their demand for ever-advanced playing aids.

Consider 13-year-old Josh Weisel, who has been playing for about six months and currently participates as a player in three games and as dungeon master in four others.

Described by his father as a "B-plus student at a tough private school," Weisel invests far more time in D&D than he does in homework and has spent $178 thus far on game materials.

"It's his passion" says his father, attorney Lee Weisel. "He's been trying to teach me the game for months. Guess what? I can't understand it. So he's teaching his nine-year-old sister."

Joy Weisel, a psychologist, has watched her son's interest in D&D intensify over the months. She approves of the game and even volunteers to pick up the pizza the players have ordered for their dinner break.

"It's really a good thing — it's very intellectually challenging. Fantasy is a great way to work out psychological issues. In every culture there are fantasies and myths that respond to basic human conflicts and needs," she says.

"Dungeons & Dragons is a continuous encounter with unknown forces, which is essentially what adolescence is. In D&D, the issues are power, experience, heroic kinds of quests that are the symbolic ways of talking about growing up.

"In D&D, kids get to act out situations impulsively. They can have impossible encounters in which they're defeated and bloodied. And they can have enormous successes. In real life, their encounters have to be much more moderate and controlled because the risks in our culture are so great.

"The dungeon master becomes a mystical, magical father figure who mediates the impulsive behavior of the players. And if a quest is successful, the dungeon master gives points for it and if it's a devastating failure he can resurrect you.

The game answers a very human need for mythology."

Adult players, too, say they enjoy the role-playing benefits of the game. Holmes, the neurologist who edited the D&D rule book, notes that the game enables its players "to be the heroes instead of just reading about them. The players get to invest their egos in their characters. Most of it is wish fulfilment."

He added: "Some players like having D&D simplified. And there are others for whom it can never be too complicated," he says.

Holmes has been playing with some of the same people for five years and he's watched the forms of adventure mature as the players do:

"Some of my teenage friends were extremely violent when we started out. As they got older there was a strong element of sexuality and less violence. Most of the characters got married."

D&D itself is just a start, having triggered a number of competitive fantasy-role playing variants. "Tunnels and Trolls," "Warlocks and Warriors" and "Chivalry and Sorcery" are but a few of the mutants on the market. Other variants are described in The Dragon, the magazine published by the makers of D&D, which includes such instructions as how to incorporate Tarot cards in D&D to add "intrigue, confusion and a little healthy bloodshed to your dungeon expeditions."

Kenton leaves $500,000

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Bandleader Stan Kenton ordered that his Stan Kenton Orchestra be disbanded after his death and he left his musical manuscripts to a Texas university.

Kenton's will, dated Jan. 1, 1978, was filed for probate Thursday in Superior Court. The jazz musician died Aug. 25 after suffering a stroke. He was 67.

The petition for probate values his estate at more than $500,000, with an annual income exceeding $25,000. A court hearing was set for Sept. 20.

In his will, Kenton said he has given nobody permission to use his name in connection with an orchestra. His musical scores and compositions were left to North Texas State University in Denton, with permission for Creative World Music Publiciations, Inc., to make copies.

His three children each received a third of his remaining estate. His oldest daughter, Leslie Brooke Smith, 38, was to have her share outright, while his other daughter, Dana Padilla, 22, and his son, Lance, 21, will receive theirs from a trust.

Poison flown to battle rats

GENEVA, (Reuter) — The Red Cross flew supplies of pesticides to war-ravaged Cambodia on Wednesday to deal with swarms of rats in Phnom Penh. The rats are multiplying rapidly and must be eliminated to avert a health hazard, the International Committee of the Red Cross said. The rat poison was included in a shipment of emergency supplies carried by an international relief flight from Bangkok.

Babysitting

EVERYONE'S LOOKING FOR childcare. Daycare Moms, evenings sitters, weekend sitter. Do you want to advertise cheaply, I'll list in Sit Direct for $1. It's a babysitting directory for Victoria to be published shortly. Parents can call you, not an agency, and you can ask your own price, no commissions. If you look after children and want Victoria to know about you, send $1 to: Sid Direct, Mothering Heights Enterprises, 1098 Jasmine Ave, Victoria. Inquiries: 479-0496. First edition deadline October 15. Thanks to Human Resources and Victoria City Police for permission.

308 CARDS OF THANKS

WE WOULD LIKE TO EXPRESS our appreciation to relatives and friends and also thanks to the staff of Extensive Care at the Gorge Road Hospital following the sudden loss of our mother and grandmother (Grace, Garvie Rourke). Special thanks to Rev. Kerley for his comforting words. Also First Memorial Services Ltd.
From the Rourke and Ianson families.

308 CARDS OF THANKS

WE WOULD LIKE TO EXPRESS our sincere appreciation to all our relations and friends for their many acts of kindness following the sudden loss of our wife, mother and grandmother, Velma Robertson. We also wish to thank Dr. G. McKenzie and the Medical Staff in the Coronary Intensive Care Unit of The Royal Jubilee Hospital for their assistance and compassion. Special thanks to Rev. Bruce Molloy for his comforting works and to Sands for a beautiful service.
Jim Robertson, son and daughter-in-law Jim and Geri, Grandsons Jamie, Geordie, Torrie, Martie.

WITH DEEPEST APPRECIATION we wish to express our thanks to all our relatives, friends, and the many friends of Michael who gave their love, sympathy and support after the loss of our beloved son and brother. A special thanks to the Doctors and nurses of Victoria General who gave so much of their skill and time, also to Pastor Ronald Nelson, Mr. John Wells, soloist Irene Robinson and Pallbearers.
Arnold and Marie Weldam and family.

309 IN MEMORIAM

BENTHAM — In loving memory of Dad, who passed away, September 1, 1979.
Peacefully, sleeping, resting at last,
The world's weary troubles and trails are past,
In silence he suffered, in patience he bore,
Till God called him home to suffer no more.
—Always remembered and loved by George and Therese.

MORRIS- IN LOVING MEMORY of my dear husband, Kenneth (Ken) who passed away August 31-1978. I remember the day I met you and the day God made you mine, I remember the day I lost you dear and I will till the end of time. But, through all the tears and heart ache, there is one thing that makes me glad, it was me you chose to share with you our love and life together. Dearly loved and missed every day by his wife Ellen, family & friends.

STOVRA — In loving memory of Henry, who passed away Sept. 1, 1974.
Beyond my smile there lies a tear,
For the husband I need and loved so dear
My heart still aches as I whisper low,
God bless you dear, I miss you so.
—Fondly remembered by Irene.

THEY SHALL GROW NOT OLD AS WE WHO ARE LEFT GROW OLD, AGE SHALL NOT WEARY THEM, NOR THE YEARS CONDEMN, AT THE GOING DOWN OF THE SUN, AND IN THE MORNING, WE WILL REMEMBER THEM.
WITH GRATITUDE, SANDS

Heavy are our hearts today,
Memory brings you back once more,
To the time when you were with us,
To the happy
days of yore.

U.S. tax cheats cost $19 billion

Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Internal Revenue Service Friday estimated that Americans are not reporting between $100 billion and $135 billion of their income each year, depriving the Treasury of between $19 billion and $26 billion in taxes.

The IRS said $75 billion to $100 billion of this unreported income stems from legal sources, such as tips or commissions, and another $25 billion to $35 billion comes from crime — drugs, prostitution and gambling.

The figures, the result of an 18-month study by a special IRS panel, marked the first formal effort by the government to calculate the size of the so-called "underground economy."

The $135 billion estimate was based on 1976 income levels. If those figures were enlarged to account for inflation, the underground economy would total $167 billion this year, with the amount of lost taxes at $32 billion.

If the IRS estimates are accurate, that means that more than $1 of every $10 that Americans take in as income went unreported in 1976. Technically, all income must be reported unless it is specifically tax-exempt.

These amounts are sure to raise questions about the adequacy of IRS enforcement efforts. The service repeatedly has contended that compliance with the tax laws generally is good, with relatively few violations.

IRS Commissioner Jerome Kurtz Friday declined to answer questions about the new report publicly, apparently out of reluctance to upstage congressional committees planning to conduct hearings on the issue next week.

However, officials said at a briefing that, while the totals were "a cause for concern," the figures were "not shocking" in a $2.3 trillion economy. They said even with such gaps, the IRS still collects 90 percent of all taxes owed.

Kurtz noted in a preface to the report that the Treasury has proposed legislation to mandate withholding on income from tips and commssions, and said officials were planning other measures to broaden withholding requirements.

Friday's report showed that the bulk of the otherwise-legal income that now is going unreported in the United States is going into the pockets of ordinary citizens, who appear to be hiding all or part of their total income from the IRS.

Gas-guzzler engines gone

DETROIT (AP) — A familiar monster, the 400-cubic-inch internal combustion engine, has become a victim of the trend to smaller cars.

The last of those big engines will fade away with the 1979 models. The biggest engine offered in a 1980 car will be 10 per cent smaller, a 360-cubic-inch, or 5.9-litre, motor offered in some Chrysler models.

As has been true for several years, the shrinkage brings cars with more plastics, more aluminum, more electronics and more diesels.

Three-way catalysts will be used to meet tougher emission standards.

The new model year brings only one new front-wheel drive entry, but that's just the calm before the storm in 1981.

American Motors Corp. is bringing out the U.S. industry's first four-wheel drive cars — as distinguished from trucks like AMC's Jeeps.

The biggest break in years from the rectangular or fastback styling themes comes with Cadillac's all-new, front-wheel drive Seville, whose trunk sweeps down from the roof like a fastback, then bulges out like some Rolls-Royce models of the 1930s.

This is the year each manufacturer's average fuel economy must hit 32 kilometres a gallon or better. All say they will do at least that well, even though they may no longer count their captive imports.

Prices are going up. Look for increases of about 3½ per cent over final 1979 prices, which should not last long. The industry now raises prices in small but frequent steps instead of holding prices for an entire model year.

Tipplers must draw drapes

BUDAPEST(UPI) — The police armored car screeched to a halt in front of a darkened doorway and two officers trained their machine guns at a seedy character sipping a bottle of beer.

The above scenario, from a cartoon in the government daily Magyar Hirlap, echoed the worst nightmares of the capital's tipplers Friday as Budapest's new "no boozing in public" regulations went into effect.

The ban on booze, aimed at reducing Hungary's high alcoholism rate, prohibits the consumption of alcohol "at work places and their environs," on bridges, city buses, staircases and in doorways, courtyards and abandoned construction sites.

Anyone caught taking a stray sip faces an on-the-spot fine of up to $90.

There was a lot of grumbling on the first dry day on the streets of Budapest — a city once famous for having "a drunk on every corner."

"Looks like I'm going to have to find a new job," said Gaspar Torocsik, 35, only half-joking. "I work near a liquor store and those are the areas where the police will be keeping the sharpest lookout."

Torocsik said he would look for work near the city gardens or the Danube River island of Narguerite which have been exempted from the ban.

Tibor Hulak is also unhappy about the new ruling even though, at 16, he doesn't drink much himself.

"This is going to cut into my income," he said. "I make a pile in tips carting bottles of beer to construction workers at noontime."

Retired railwayman Istvan Turaczi, 76, said his $50-a-month pension won't buy him many evenings out on the town.

"Do you know what it costs to drink in a bar?" he complained. "Before I could buy a few bottles and sit on a doorstep with my friends — no tips and who needs the white tablecloth?"

Mexico-U.S. deal for gas falters

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico has called off a bid to sell natural gas to the United States after being unable to agree on a price in two days of negotiations with a special U.S. envoy, Foreign Minister Jorge Castaneda announced.

After the talks broke down Friday, Castaneda told a news conference that Mexico had offered to sell 300 million cubic feet of gas a day at a price pegged to that of home heating oil selling in the United States.

Sources said the Mexican offer worked out to more than $3.20 per 1,000 cubic feet of natural gas — or about 40 cents more per 1,000 cubic feet than the United States currently pays for gas imported from Canada.

Castaneda said Mexico also demanded the right to break the proposed six-year contract at any point on 90 days notice and wanted a built-in price-increase clause as well.

The foreign minister headed the Mexican negotiating team that met in Mexico City on Wednesday and Thursday with U.S. State Undersecretary Warren Christopher and his aides. The U.S. negotiators returned to Washington Friday.

"President Carter was constantly consulted during the negotiations," Castaneda said. "There was no agreement and the talks on sale of natural gas to the United States have concluded. President Jose Lopez Portillo will not discuss the subject when he meets with President Carter." They are scheduled to meet Sept. 28-29 in Washington.

U.S. sources said the United States wanted to purchase 300 million to 500 million cubic feet of natural gas a day on a long-term contract beginning in 1982. That is the amount currently burned off in Mexican oilfields.

The United States offered to pay $3.00 per 1,000 cubic feet, 20 cents more than it pays Canada for the three trillion cubic feet of Canadian gas it imports each year, the sources said.

U.S. experts said the United States wanted a long-term Mexican gas contract "as a secure source of fuel" to replace as much as 300,000 barrels a day of imported crude oil.

Martial law extended

ANKARA (AP) — The Turkish parliament approved extension of martial law for two more months in 19 of Turkey's 67 provinces. Interior Minister Hasan Fehmi Gunes said the extension is needed to continue the campaign against political terrorism and protect campaigners and voters during parliamentary elections Oct. 14.

A SWISS MASTER SHOOTS FOR A WORLD'S RECORD

Werner Hug, Switzerland's former World Junior Champion, came close to a world's record for simultaneous chess play in May in Emmenbrueke, Switzerland. Hug took on 560 opponents and scored 385 wins, 126 draws, and lost only 49 games. Hug broke the record set by Czechoslovakian Champion Vlastimil Hort in Reykjavik in April of 1977. Hort faced 550 opponents during 24 hours of play and won 477 games, drew 63, while losing a mere ten. Apparently, Hug thought that this was still the world's record. However, in January, 1978, Branimir Brebrich faced 575 players in Edmonton, Alberta. Brebrich won 533, drew 27, and lost 15 in 28 hours of play.

A special feature of Hug's exhibition, though, was that he faced strong players, all rated between 1700 and 2200 on the Elo scale. (2200 is master rank.) Hug played 50 boards at a time; as players lost they were immediately replaced by new ones. The young master, a mathematics student, walked just under 18 miles in the course of the event. The exhibition took a total of 25 hours to complete; Hug took breaks totaling five hours, leaving an actual playing time of 20 hours. In that time, Hug played about 24,000 moves. Doctors periodically checked his physical condition throughout the event.

The exhibition was organized by Caissa, a firm of international chess promoters based in Olten, Switzerland. It was conducted by the Swiss Chess Federation under the supervision of international arbiters of FIDE (World Chess Federation). The opening banquet was attended by former FIDE President and former World Champion Dr. Max Euwe of Holland. The organizers estimated some 20,000 spectators observed some part of Hug's outstanding performance.

Ex-Canadian buys N.Y. skyscraper

NEW YORK (AP) — The 77-storey Chrysler Building, once the tallest in the world, was sold Friday to Canadian-born entrepreneur Jack Kent Cooke, the building's present owners announced.

The price and terms of the sale by Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Co. were not released.

Cooke recently sold the Los Angeles Forum, along with pro basketball's Los Angeles Lakers and pro hockey's Los Angeles Kings.

L.A. cruising strip closed

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — "Boulevard Nights" will never be the same again — police hope.

To combat gang fights and killings, a long stretch of Whittier Boulevard in East Los Angeles, a popular weekend "cruising" strip, was closed to traffic Friday night, and will be closed on weekend nights from now on.

The street received national attention in several recent movies, including Boulevard Nights, a film about the weekend cruising ritual in the Mexican-American neighborhood.

Teen-agers and young adults flocked to the boulevard, driving up and down the street in autos, trucks and vans. Many of them were showing off vehicles decorated, painted, customized or altered in strange ways, such as equipment to raise and lower the body in order to set off showers of sparks from scraping the metal on the street.

The area is filled with dozens of violent youth gangs, and the cruising ritual brought them into contact, crossing territorial lines.

The sheriff's department said that since January, crimes along the boulevard included 15 killings, 164 beatings, 119 weapons violations, eight rapes, 74 robberies, 12 assaults on police officers and 56 narcotics arrests, plus 556 "gang-related incidents."

The sheriff's department said it would block off a mile-long stretch of the boulevard, from Atlantic Boulevard to Eastern Avenue, at 9:30 p.m. every Friday, Saturday and Sunday night. It will be reopened at 5 a.m. Saturday and Sunday and 2 a.m. Monday.

Firefighter training badly needed in the north

ILFORD, Man. (CP) — A house-fire that killed seven persons in this isolated hamlet has touched remote communities throughout the north and brought renewed demands for improved volunteer firefighter training.

When the fire struck, in early August, friends and neighbors dragged a hose from a nearby school only to find they were helpless to stop the blaze.

"There was plenty of hose but we couldn't get the water turned on," says Jim Chornaby, a resident of Ilford, about 130 kilometres northeast of Thompson.

"There's no school caretaker during the summer and there was no one else who knew how to turn on the water system," says Chornaby.

The real problem, he says, is "no one is trained, no one knows what to do and is ready to take charge."

Former Ilford mayor Kip Thompson says poor housing conditions add to fire dangers.

"I've seen so many houses where stoves and pipes have rusted through. A lot of them are heated with 45-gallon oil drums that also aren't safe.

"It's a time of (provincial government) restraint but surely if we got our priorities straight, we'd find the money to give the 30,000 to 40,000 people in remote communities at least a chance to prevent fires and save lives and property," says Thompson.

"You felt so bloody stupid out there watching a building burn, knowing your friends were trapped in it and not being able to do a damn thing," he adds.

"When you've gone through a thing like this, you don't feel you want to blame anybody. But you do feel responsible to see that every possible thing is done to prevent it from happening again."

Representatives of several communities say they have sufficient equipment but training is poor for potential volunteers.

Mayor Neil Myers of Cormorant, about 520 kilometres northwest of Winnipeg, wants the provincial government to adopt a program similar to that used by federal officials who send firefighting instructors to northern reserves.

"The trouble is that a lot of us who would like to get trained are too busy to take a week or 10 days to get it," says Myers.

"We usually wind up sending somebody who isn't so busy or unemployed. They come back and give us some badly-diluted idea of what they've been taught."

Allan McLeod, the former mayor of Cross Lake, says provincial training has paid off for his community, about 400 kilometres north of Winnipeg.

"Last year we put out a couple of fires," says McLeod. Their efforts are hampered by things such as the lack of a heated garage for the tanker truck. The truck must be drained in winter or the water will freeze, he says.

The federal Indian affairs department has three northern instructors who can speak Cree and Saulteaux. They move from reserve to reserve, holding public meetings and demonstrating equipment.

"You've got to have people on this job who understand the way people have to live in the north," says Max Bee, one of the federal fire prevention officers.

$32M centre stirs up voters

EDMONTON (CP) — Construction of a $32-million convention centre in the city has begun despite political jostling which continues to make headlines in local papers.

Sewers and other utility lines are being installed on the riverbank site, south of Jasper Avenue and between 97th and 99th Streets, and the centre is scheduled to open in the summer of 1982.

In the political scene, the provincial government in the spring session of the legislature passed a number of acts which established an Edmonton Convention Centre Authority to manage and operate the complex.

Organizers of a petition opposing the centre are unhappy with recent developments. Ed Ewasiuk, president of Edmonton Voters Association, says he thought the legislation would be delayed for a while.

"Council is going ahead with the convention centre — that's obvious," he says. "But by going ahead they may be in some violation of legal requirements."

Acting city solicitor Tony Konye disagrees.

"There's nothing actionable now with what the city is doing. I don't see how the courts could intervene — unless there's a petition for a plebiscite and the courts rule council has to take it to the people."

The voters' association, led by former alderman David Leadbeater and labor leader Ewasiuk, says it has gathered more than 15,000 names for an anti-centre petition. Organizers say the petition will be presented to city council and if council does not act on it, court action may be initiated.

Members of the association are concerned that consumers will end up paying for the cost of the centre. Olsen.

The latest estimates by the city administration and architectural consultants placed the cost of the completed centre at $32.1 million.

The approved project will have the largest floor space of any convention centre in Canada, says George MacKay, general manager of the centre.

It will have more than 100,000 square feet of floor space on the main floor and an additional 37,000 square feet in 27 meeting rooms in other parts of the building as well as housing the Aviation Hall of Fame and perhaps a restaurant, he says.

The centre grounds will also have two large terraces overlooking the river area.

Teachers doing well poll shows

EDMONTON (CP) — Edmonton parents think public schools and teachers are doing a good job but have less confidence in the city's public school board, a confidential report says.

The report was based on more than 41,000 questionnaires distributed by the school board to parents, students and public school staff. At least 85 per cent of persons in each group responded.

"Eighty-seven per cent of the parents said they were satisfied with schools in general," board chairman Don Massey said in an interview Wednesday, a week before official release of the report.

Massey said the school board did not receive a vote of confidence in the poll and results indicated that was because parents felt they lacked adequate information about the board.

Everyone should have "Feelings"

"Feelings" flotation system by Simmons.
A major break-through in sleeping comfort.

"Feelings" combines the sleeping comfort of a water mattress with the beauty and convenience of a conventional bed. You owe it to yourself to try it. When you have, your body will convince you faster than we ever could that it's undisputedly the most comfortable sleeping experience to come along in decades. Sleep on "Feelings" by Simmons . . . you'll realize somebody cares about yours.

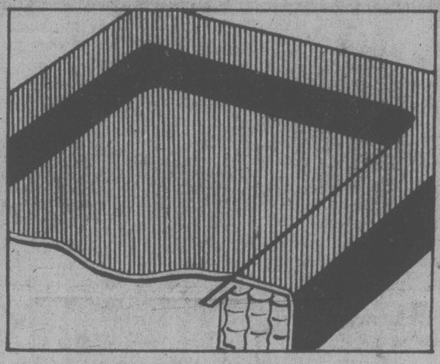
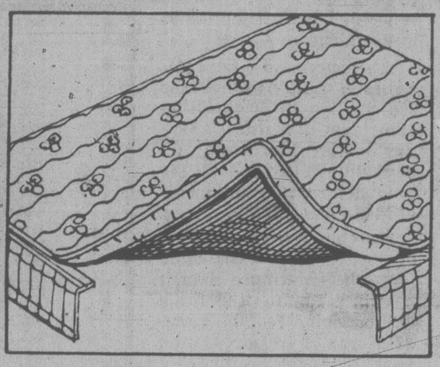
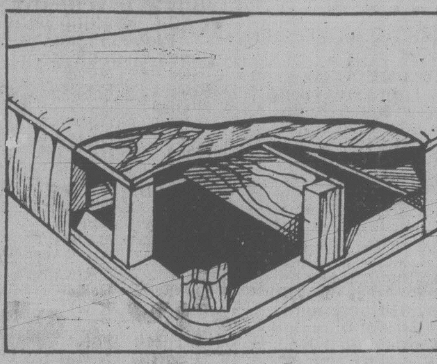
The Water Mattress
It is constructed with baffles which restrict the undesired wave motion associated with other water mattresses. This improved system conforms to your body, relaxing pressure points that cause you to toss and turn.



The Frame
The frame or perimeter of the water mattress consists of rows of Simmons famous Beautyrest pocketed coils. These coils give you edge to edge comfort and support, yet allows you to get on and off the mattress easily.



The Cover
Pillow top contruction covered in multi-colored-Damask ticking gives it the handsome appearance of a conventional mattress. Uses regular sheets and blankets, and fits a regular headboard.



The Foundation
Underneath the conventional looking cover lies a specifically designed support system to accommodate the weight of the water.

Detaining sots no longer legal

WINNIPEG (CP) — A provincial court judge has ruled that police have no right to arrest people just for being intoxicated in public.

In a recent decision handed down in Dauphin, Man., Judge William Marantz said Manitoba's Intoxicated Persons Detention Act permits a form of preventive detention that may be permissible in the Soviet Union but has no place in Canadian law.

Bill Morton, deputy director of prosecutions, said Thursday questions raised by the judge will be examined before a decision is made on an appeal.

Home canning peril seen

WINNIPEG (CP) — A large majority of Manitobans who replied to a survey about canning food at home are risking butulism poisoning, the University of Manitoba says.

Mina McDaniel, of the department of foods and nutrition said Thursday 86 per cent of 457 people surveyed were using incorrect canning methods.

Pilote Butte going wet?

REGINA (CP) — The community of Pilot Butte, about 10 kilometres east of here, will get a vote on whether to allow liquor outlets in town, the provincial cabinet has decided.

The local recreation board wants to put a bar in the town's community centre but other residents have objected because children use the centre.

Museum takes flyer on ST-28

WINNIPEG (CP) — Western Canada Aviation Museum is hoping to acquire a discarded ST-28 aircraft, a momento of the ill-fated and costly attempt to establish an aircraft manufacturing industry in Manitoba.

Gord Emberley, executive-director of the privately-owned museum which restores historic aircraft, said the plane is of interest because it is "one of the very few aircraft actually built in Manitoba by Manitobans."

A fraud squad beat is her cup of tea

WINNIPEG (CP) — Detective Gordon Doncaster doesn't mind letting his partner go first if he thinks it will open doors for him.

"They're not quite so tough when they see a five-foot, seven-inch woman," he says.

Doncaster has been working the fraud beat with officer Linda Kisil, 25, since June. Of 26 women currently on the Winnipeg police force, Kisil is the second to have received anti-fraud training.

Kisil's working clothes tend to be casual—slacks in case she has to chase someone, and a jacket that conceals a pistol in a shoulder holster.

"Nobody expects you to be with the police," she says. "People hang up the phone on me. They consider it a joke. When I go to someone's home, they can't believe it at first."

Last year, Winnipeg's 18 fraud investigators arrested 860 people for everything from trying to pass a phoney lottery ticket to collecting insurance on a non-existent car.

And just as women are becoming more involved investigating frauds, there are more women perpetrating them.

Last year, women bounced 43 per cent of the bad cheques passed in Winnipeg, compared with 27 per-cent two years ago.

"Women are getting very equal in this line of work," says Doncaster.

Most women who pass bad cheques "aren't really crooks," he says. "They're nickel-dime—women who are fed up not having enough money for groceries or clothes."

Men are still the brains behind the big, imaginative frauds, he says.

Doncaster recalls a young American, with a fistful of phoney identification papers whirling around the world on credit cards for two years before being collared in Winnipeg.

"The Las Vegas guys come up here thinking we're bush league. 'Winnipeg? Where's that? We'll rip them off and have a hell of a time'."

Rubber cheques are the most common form of fraud, accounting for a good portion of the $750,000 in cases solved by Winnipeg police last year.

No one is nabbed by police right away, but usually after three or four calls from a store's collection department.

"After all, the stores would rather have the money," Doncaster says. "We don't collect money. We just charge people."

Air Canada goes back to Winnipeg

WINNIPEG (UPC) — After more than a decade, Air Canada is moving part of its maintenance operation back to Winnipeg.

But, says Air Canada spokesman Ted Morris, that doesn't mean the maintenance workers in Montreal or Toronto or anywhere else should fear for their jobs.

On the contrary: a burgeoning fleet servicing sideline has grown up in tandem with the size of the government-owned airline's fleet, and the main service depot at Montreal's Dorval field can no longer handle all major overhaul work.

"In the past five years, our maintenance contracts have gone from $6 million to $28 million," Morris said.

"Winnipeg essentially will be benefitting from the general expansion."

New rules for credit unions

Credit unions in B.C. were given approval Friday to compete with banks and trust companies by making investments to secure a better financial return for their members.

Consumer Affairs Minister Jim Neilsen said Friday new regulations will permit credit unions in the province to invest 20 per cent of their $3.5 billion shares and deposits "in a wider range of investments."

Previously, credit union investments have been restricted to bonds and debentures guaranteed by governments, he said.

"The new regulations authorize investment in specified investments, including bonds, debentures, corporate guarantees, preferred shares of Canadian corporations, real estate and guaranteed investment certificates of Canadian trust companies," Neilsen said.

He said such investment opportunities are available to banks and trust companies and the easing of credit union investment restrictions will make them competitive with other provincial financial institutions.

"Close Up on knit blazers."

.Blazers are showing up — shaping up — this fall as beautiful new knits. The styling is hinged on a sophisticated attitude toward color and the way pieces are put together. Because of that, they're looking better than ever. The texture is more interesting . . . in boucles, chenilles, new patterns and soft ribbings. And they're shaped . . . to fit closer to the body . . . or to accentuate the whole idea of shape. Tailored, though soft. Neat, though never restricting. And the result? Blazer knits that always have a knack of looking good. The impression is one of quality. They wear better than ever — no stretching out of shape, no wrinkling. What's more, they're versatile — so they're just about the best thing you could pair with pants, skirts . . . suits. Now alone, come October with another sweater or a blouse. Here, we're showing four styles from Helen Harper, all in sizes S.M.L. Heather camel/grey V'd cardigan, 35.00, worn with a cowl, 14.00. Fancy stitch shawl wrap cardigan in tawny beige, black, garnet, mudlark, 26.00. Notch collar cardigan in black, grey mist, cloudy sand, pink glow, 24.00.

Luci Nugent gets divorce

The 13-year marriage of Luci Nugent, daughter of the late President Lyndon Johnson, ended Friday when she was granted a divorce Friday from Patrick Nugent. State District Judge Hume Cofer signed the divorce decree after lawyers agreed on a property settlement, which was not disclosed. The couple has four children. Mrs. Nugent filed for the divorce in January under Texas's no-fault divorce law that cites no grounds other than that the marriage had become "insupportable" because of discord.

Zimbabwe-Rhodesia's 55-year-old transport and power minister, Pieter van der Byl, and 26-year-old Princess Charlotte von Liechtenstein were married Friday in a glittering ceremony at Waldenstein Castle. The 200 guests included Otto Hapsburg, son of the last Austrian emperor; Prince Franz Josef II of Liechtenstein and his wife, Princess Tina and a number of British politicians, including former Conservative cabinet minister Julian Amery. Princess Charlotte is the daughter of Prince Heinrich Karl von Liechtenstein and Archduchess Elisabeth, the youngest sister of Otto Hapsburg. Heinrich Karl is a cousin of Prince Franz Josef, the ruler of the tiny principality tucked away between Switzerland and Austria.

Dr. Jack Wheeler, who's trying to take an elephant across the Alps, says he's trying to match Hannibal's historic feat. Not so, says Robert Arbogast, of Central Point, Ore. He says if Wheeler makes it he'll only be matching legendary explorer Richard Halliburton who did the deed in July, 1935. Arbogast, an avid Halliburton fan, even remembers the elephant's name — says it was Elysabethe Dalrymple.

Ex-drug guru Timothy Leary says the screaming at his home that prompted a neighbor to call police was caused by he and his wife "making loud love," not fighting. "We never fight," Leary told reporters "We were making love at the time. Neither of us had clothes on at the time, and for that I apologize."

Leary also denied they, arrested on drug charges and scheduled for arraignment Sept. 21 in Beverly Hills Municipal Court, were high on any illegal drugs or were keeping any cocaine in their apartment.

Despite that problem, Leary had kind words for the officers who arrested them.

"The police were gentlemen," he said. "It was a new situation for them. Their motives were good."

"The Beverly Hills jail is the nicest little jail of all the 30 I've been in," he said.

Johnny Cash's Boy Named Sue never had such headaches. His road show is eroding. First Jan Howard quit, and now Helen and Anita Carter, who, with Jan, comprise The Carter Sisters, have departed. That leaves only Big John, wife June Carter and the Tennessee Three Band. Cash's Los Angeles agent says Jan wants a solo career while Helen and Anita are out to put together an act with the younger generation of the Cashes.

American singer Ethel Merman fell and injured her nose and right knee during a television variety show taping in Toronto Friday night. But the 69-year-old star bounced right back, a spokesman at St. Joseph's Hospital said. She was treated and released within an hour of arriving by ambulance. Miss Merman was doing a comedy routine with Marty Allen when she stumbled.

And finally, Les Johnson is better known to Salt Lake City residents as Bananas the Clown — and that's the name he wants to appear on the city council ballot this fall. The Salt Lake City attorney's office doesn't think the idea is so funny. But Bananas, who has been in the entertainment business for 11 years, says he will fight to have his clown name on the ballot.

Surfboard Baron crosses icy Strait

WALES, Alaska (UPI) — Clinging to a 3-metre surfboard rigged with a sail made from replicas of American and Soviet flags, French Baron Arnaud de Rosnay crossed the 100-kilometre wide Bering Strait in the latest of his madcap adventures, it was reported Friday.

Wearing a black wet suit and waving, de Rosnay was met at the international boundary by a Russian destroyer which escorted him to the Siberian coastal village of Naukan.

Sources in Paris reported that the Russian government promptly flew de Rosnay to Moscow, where his sponsor, Paris Match magazine, was attempting to arrange his return to France.

"We had an agreement that when he made the coast he would fire three flares," said Andy Klamser, an Alaskan photographer hired to record the adventure on film. "At 10:04 p.m., Bering Strait time, we saw three red flares from the village."

The baron had pushed off from the shores of Alaska in 45-degree weather while school children sang, For He's a Jolly Good fellow.

Last year, de Rosnay made a crossing of the Sahara Desert on a surfboard rigged with sails and wheels.

Botha gets cheers in Soweto

SOWETO, South Africa (AP) — Prime Minister Pieter Botha, in a shift from South Africa's rigid racial policies, visited the black township of Soweto Friday and declared: "We are all South Africans."

It was the first visit ever to this sprawling black ghetto by a prime minister of the white-minority government. He told a crowd of several thousand blacks: "Soweto deserves the status and title of a city and has just claim to the resources of this nation."

His visit and speech is certain to infuriate right-wingers and other conservatives. During a parliamentary byelection this week, they called Botha's National party "kaffirboeties" — black lovers. Botha's candidate won the election.

Botha's statement and his recognition of Soweto as a city goes against his own party's position. It is generally held that the blacks belong to their rural homelands and are permitted to live in settlements near white urban centres only when their labor is needed.

Soweto, located on the outskirts of Johannesburg, has a population of more than one million blacks, making it the country's largest city.

Botha was cheered by the blacks at the council building and David Skosana, a truck driver, told reporters: "He's too good a man. The Afrikaners (ruling whites of Dutch descent) will not keep him."

But Nthatho Motlana, who is considered the representative of Soweto's militants, refused to meet the prime minister.

Riots broke out in Soweto in 1976 over the government's attempt to require the teaching of the Dutch-based Afrikaans language in all schools. Violence spread throughout the country, with more than 700 blacks killed and the government removed the language requirement.

In his speech, Botha promised to consult with Soweto leaders and officials of 170 other recently established community councils in black townships before making decisions that affect them.

Sextuplets survival 'unlikely'

ATHENS (Reuter) — A 21-year-old Greek woman gave birth to sextuplets today but doctors said the four girls and two boys were very weak and not expected to live.

The doctors at an Athens hospital said Lambrini Tika from Volos, Greece, had the six babies prematurely.

The woman had not taken any fertilty drugs, doctors said.

Months of terror end as bat invasion wanes

PITTSBURGH (AP) — In the last month, Tom Smith has killed 360 bats as they flew each night from the attic of his century-old home. But now a roof and the workings of Mother Nature should put an end to four months of terror for the suburban Pittsburgh family plagued by the winged creatures.

"We're waiting for them to start leaving to hibernate," Smith's wife, Pat, said Friday. "When we're sure there are no more left, we're going to put a new roof on and begin from there."

About 25 of the mammals remain, she said.

Hundreds of bats occupied the attic of the Smith's white frame house, whose roof is not well-sealed. Experts say the winged creatures entered through the chinks and bred there every spring, apparently for the last 50 years.

Although the bats tested by health authorities were not rabid, the family lived in constant fear.

The Smiths estimate they killed an average of 20 a night as the creatures began their nocturnal hunt for food. The bats terrified the couple's two small children by banging against the outer walls and trying to crawl through windows on their return.

"We hope it will be over soon," said Mrs. Smith.

Smith, owner of a home-repair firm, discovered the bats in April while fixing a bathroom ceiling. Exterminators wouldn't touch the case because of the large numbers. The family tried to poison the bats and frighten them with flood lights and high-pitched sounds from a stereo system, but to no avail.

The ordeal has been costly to the family. Mrs. Smith estimates the new roof will set them back a few thousand dollars. They ran up a $116 phone bill last month returning calls from people offering advice from as far away as Florida.

Mrs. Smith said no one was physically hurt by the bats. But she took her six-year-old daughter to a psychiatrist because the girl refused to go to bed by herself after finding a bat in her room.

Saunders & Hitchman, well known in the community as experts in the import car field, brings Victoria a great new Datsun facility. S & H has sold thousands of cars during its career of almost 30 years and has established a reputation for honesty and integrity. A reputation that will assure Datsun buyers of fair dealings, no matter what car or truck they purchase.

Come and inspect S & H Datsun Centre for yourself — the service after sales people. You'll have the opportunity to meet the great Datsun Team, including General Sales Manager Dave Stevenson, Parts Manager Al Fischer and Service Manager Herb Grew. They're all dedicated to giving you the very best in quick, courteous service. They want you to be happy with your Datsun.

S & H were impressed with the Nissan attitude and variety of Datsun vehicles. Datsun delivers the overall design, quality of construction, and longterm value that today's car buyer needs. The very best in after-sales service is the trademark of the S & H Team.

The S & H Datsun lineup includes family-size cars, economy cars, sports cars and hard-working trucks. Each has been built to give Canadian buyers the finest long-term value possible. While imported cars have increased in cost, S & H feels that their value has increased even more, especially when all the standard features, extras on most domestic cars, are considered.

Datsun's 6 years of rust protection also helps these cars maintain their excellent value and provide continuing satisfaction.

The many customers and acquaintances of Saunders & Hitchman are invited to visit both their locations, and see the full line of Datsun cars and trucks.

Hal Coulson . . . 'A bit like detective work'

'It's the king of hobbies, and the hobby of kings'

By JANE COVERNTON
Times Staff

Victoria is the biggest little stamp-collecting centre in the world, says Fort Street stamp dealer Ron Thiel.

Even allowing for some boosterism on his part, it seems that stamp-collecting is immensely popular here.

There are two stamp-collecting clubs for adults and one for children and several stores catering to the trade.

Why the popularity?

"Stamp-collecting is the king of hobbies and the hobby of kings," says Thiel.

Apart from that, the large number of retired people in Victoria makes this town a natural.

Many retired folk seem to enjoy the mild thrill of discovery, the vicarious knowledge of far parts of the world, and the satisfaction of putting together a perfect collection.

Says Hal Coulson, president of the V.I. Philatelic Society: "Everybody has their own reason for collecting. It's a bit like detective work. I like putting together the parts, chasing down a stamp, going here, looking there."

A long time ago someone gave him a stamp book for Christmas. Since then he's put it away and come back to it several times. That's the kind of hobby it is.

Now Coulson specializes in stamps from the British Empire.

"There are lots of interesting small countries. Some of them came out with stamps for only a short time," he says.

Coulson has issues of the first stamps — the Great Britain penny black and tupenny blue — dating from 1840. They aren't scarce but they are popular. So now they are worth up to $250 a copy, depending on their shape.

That's the other thing about stamp-collecting. If you know what you are doing, stamps can be an investment.

There has been a jump in value of about 50 per cent a year in some stamps.

A Great Britain souvenir sheet with four stamps on it was worth $1.85 when it was issued. Three months later it was worth $15.

A 50-cent Bluenose from the early 30s is now worth $300 to $400.

"It's like the stock market. It's a matter of taking your chances," says Thiel, "but you have to know what you're doing."

"There's a lot of speculation in stamps. It's forcing the prices of better stamps up. Canadian stamps prior to 1950 are appreciating due to the pressure of stamp investors."

Because of the escalating value of stamps, many collectors will not discuss their collections for fear of thieves.

One Victoria collector, who is reputed to have one of the best collections in the world, says he has had more than one mean experience when stories got in the paper.

It's not just investors and connoisseurs who collect stamps. Kids still do it too.

The Victoria Junior Stamp Club has 35 members and sometimes children have to wait up to a year to get in.

Club members, from seven to 14, go to meetings to learn about stamps, to trade, to play games and to get ready for competitions.

Lester Small, who runs the junior club, says the children earn money to keep their collections going by paper routes, baby-sitting, and gardening.

"If they want new stamps badly enough, they find a way to earn the money," says Small.

He has been collecting stamps for 28 years. He has one collection that tells the story of the Bible from the creation to the crucifixion and another that tells the story of how a pensioner can be a millionare — through collecting stamps.

PCL spokesman urges doubled bus terminal

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

Victoria needs a bus terminal building at least twice as big as the present structure, Pacific Coach Lines general manager Jack Thomas said today.

He said traffic on up-Island routes is up more than 14 per cent from last year and passenger totals are also increasing on the Victoria-Vancouver run.

"It's a tight fit at the present terminal and it will get worse as (bus) traffic increases."

PCL directors Thursday began the search for a new terminal site after being officially informed by Canadian Pacific that its lease on Empress land will not be renewed when it expires July 31, 1979.

Many directors first learned of the decision in a Times story Wednesday, Thomas said.

One site to be examined by the directors is the bus storage area behind the old Crystal Garden building but the space probably is not sufficient, Thomas said.

However a provincial government-owned parking lot beside the Executive House might be large enough.

Thomas said construction of a new terminal would begin soon after a site is obtained.

He said any new terminal should make provision for future needs and have a minimum of 14 bays, twice the number at the present site.

Victoria should also consider using the new terminal for city buses as well.

Thomas said Hydro buses currently wait at Douglas and Yates for extended periods and add to traffic congestion.

"It would be better for all concerned if they waited off the street in the terminal. The terminal would also be the ideal starting place for the free bus service."

Thomas said a downtown site is vital for the new transit centre but sufficient space was an equally-important consideration.

It would be more efficient to have all bus operations centred in one area, rather than have them scattered as they are at present.

The PCL board will be reporting to the provincial government on its findings regarding site considerations as quickly as possible, he said.

Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm has already contacted the board, asking for recommendations on developing a new terminal.

Meanwhile, the E & N Steering Committee, a group of United Transportation Union members campaigning to save the up-Island passenger service, has called a meeting for Sept. 12 in the provincial museum board room to discuss the possibility of incorporating a rail terminal in the new bus depot.

Chairman John Cooper, who agrees a downtown location would be best, said Victoria would be best served by a large terminal incorporating all forms of land transportation.

Cooper said the terminal should be as close as possible to the Inner Harbor, especially with the development of the convention centre there.

The present bus terminal is one block away. The two major downtown sites under consideration at the moment, behind the old Crystal Garden and beside the Executive House, are both two blocks away.

Electricians delay strike

City electricians today spread the word they are unlikely to begin strike action before Tuesday in order to avoid interfering with the Labor Day holiday.

They are in a legal position to strike at any time.

Jim Walker, president of the outside local of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, said the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers is concerned that large numbers of people might miss out on the Monday paid holiday if picket action begins this weekend.

CUPE has announced its members will honor all IBEW picket lines.

"They will give us advance warning before they set up a picket line and they have indicated they will not do anything before Tuesday," Walker said.

"They honored our picket line during our three-month strike and of course we will honor theirs."

CUPE Local 388, which represents civic inside workers, will also honor any IBEW picket line.

Of special concern is the Mann Cup lacrosse series, being played in Victoria for the first time in 22 years, starting Tuesday.

If a picket line goes up at Memorial Arena, it would be honored by CUPE operating engineers. It is not certain what the effects might be.

Royal Athletic Park could also be affected by picket activity.

Also on the target list are Victoria city hall, public works yards, garbage collection and Johnson St. bridge construction.

The IBEW has not indicated where it would begin strike activity.

The 15 IBEW union members look after street and traffic lights, maintain fire and police radio systems and coin-operated parking devices.

Ask the Times

Q. Is there any basic requirement for running a health food store? I chiefly refer to education, since many dispense much advice on foods and vitamins, etc.
R.B.

A. Anyone with the notion of keeping a store of any kind is welcome to have a run at it, provided he has required zoning, building permits, business licence and, in the case of food-handling, certification by the health department.

'Hit hard, hit fast' is B.C. forest fire policy

By AB KENT
Times Staff

In some parts of the U.S. the philosophy towards forest fires amounts to "let 'em burn".

But not in B.C.

Fighting all forest fires — at a cost so far this year of more than $16 million — is an official government policy that has both popular and political support.

The U.S. forest service believes in letting fires burn within specific limits laid down in a pre-determined formula.

American forestry officials divide timbered land into zones in which the assets and probabilities are balanced against the risks and until a fire reaches its specified limit for a zone, firefighters don't go into action.

But in B.C., foresters can't afford to wait for natural tree regeneration. The blanket policy here is to hit hard, hit fast.

There is also the danger to populated areas, power transmission lines, railways, fisheries, ecological reserves, recreational areas and industrial developments.

"I'm quite certain, nowadays, that cleansing fires would not be accepted politically or by the general public," says Don Owen, chief fire protection officer in B.C.

"You always run the risk of a fire blowing its stack and becoming a home-run fire."

Hence the B.C. policy of hitting quick, with the objective of controlling all wild fires by 10 a.m. the following day, before wind and other factors worsen.

The initial attack is successful in 86 per cent of all fires, while the remaining 14 per cent become big fires.

Thanks to today's technology, no part of the province is really inaccessible, Owen says.

There may be priorities involved, however and a fire in a tree plantation would be given precedence over a a fire on a remote mountaintop.

Preference also would be given to prime timber-growing land.

"I can't think of any areas on Vancouver Island where we could allow fire to ramble around," Owen said.

Besides the timber resource, planners have to consider aesthetics, fish and wildlife, water and soil erosion and many other factors.

This year to date there has been a significant increase in the number of fires — more than 2,200 compared to 3,271 in all of 1978 — but the area burned is less at about 50,000 acres.

Last year nearly 130,000 acres were lost in the whole season.

U.S. forest plan allows fires to burn within specific, pre-determined limits

Buyers beat beer hike

Sales of beer were heavy in Victoria Friday as customers stocked up before the price changed.

As soon as old stock was gone, Victoria stores began charging the new price of $5.20 a case, up 35 cents.

The new price went into effect on some brands today.

The price of draft beer will be up five cents a glass next week and bottled beer in pubs will go up 15 cents.

First brand to be sold out was Labatt's and the higher price was charged with the opening of some Victoria liquor stores this morning.

The price will hit $5.20 for all brands before the end of next week.

The provincial government will make an extra $5 million a year from the price boost.

Draft beer has been selling in the range of 40 to 50 cents but the new range will become 45 to 55 cents.

Only the B.C.-based Prince George Breweries is holding the line. A company spokesman said the brewery will hold prices down as long as possible.

Of the new 35-cent-increase on a dozen bottles, the breweries receive 22 cents. The remaining 13 cents — two cents more in sales tax and 11 cents in additional markup - goes to the government.

Police crash 2 parties

Six persons were carted off to jail after police broke up two noisy house parties in the city early today,

Two persons were taken into custody for breach of the peace and another was charged with obstructing police after officers shut down one of the parties at a house in the 1100-block North Park at 1:40 a.m. The party was attended by about 40 youths.

In the other, at a house in the 1700-block Adanac, police moved in at 3:40 a.m., ordered the 150 party-goers to leave and made three arrests.

Squatters blamed for fire

Squatters are blamed for a fire that destroyed an abandoned shack and damaged an old wharf at 1614 Store Street early today.

It took city firemen about an hour-and-a-half to extinguish the blaze which was reported at 4:08 a.m.

No one was injured.

A fire department spokesman described the loss as negligible.

Artist's bird works draw raves

LANSDOWNE

Terrific, excellent, superb.

Those were only a few of the superlatives used by guests Friday at the opening of the first major exhibition of works by Victoria's internationally-known bird artist, Fenwick Lansdowne.

The exhibition, at the provincial museum, will run for a month.

On display are 41 original paintings used to illustrate the book Rails of the World — a family of birds which include coots and gallinules.

It took Lansdowne 13 years to complete the paintings for the book written by S. Dillon Ripley, secretary of the Smithsonian Institution.

Lansdowne who was committed to other projects during those years, admits it kept him busy.

"I thought it would never end." he said.

Lansdowne first studies his subjects in the field if this is possible. He then goes through collections of bird skins to get the detail and color. He paints with gouache, a type of watercolor and usually uses heavy watercolor paper.

Lansdowne is presently working to complete paintings for volume two of his Birds of the West Coast, to be published in April of next year.

Lansdowne's career started when he was 14. Without any formal training and little instruction, he started drawing birds. His work soon attracted the provincial museum which sponsored the first showing of his work.

At the age of 23, he won the acclaim of critics as one of the world's leading painters of birds following two exhibitions in London and New York.

19th century gold-rush tavern today a national monument

By ANDREE BOSCH
and PAM JONES

JOHANNESBURG — South Africa's numerous national monuments range from the Cape's stately Table Mountain to an old railway tunnel and a 19th century Transvall gold-rush brothel.

The brothel, which was also famous as a pub, is today a neat and unpretentious little wood-and-iron house in Barberton, about 250 km east of Johannesburg.

It is one of the buildings that have survived from Barberton's early boom town days of the 1880s when gold was discovered nearby. Liquor stores, music halls and pubs proliferated, all competing with the mines to profit from the rich gold strikes.

This building, erected in 1887, was called the Globe Tavern. Two years ago a resident of Barberton, now a singularly tranquil and respectable little town, bought the dilapidated house and with the aid of old photographs undertook a magnificent job of restoration.

Barmaids were something of a feature of the early pubs and one of these employed by the Globe Tavern was known far and wide as Cockney Liz. Extremely attractive, witty and warm-hearted, she was the queen of Barberton's barmaids. It was her custom, at the end of an evening, to leap onto the bar and have herself auctioned to the highest bidder. There is a story about an unfortunate miner who tendered 100 Kimberley Imperial shares, then worth about R2000 ($2,800 Canadian at today's exchange rates), and won Liz for the rest of the night. Overcome by his good fortune, he celebrated too well and spent the night snoring on the barroom floor, alone. His shares were not returned.

The Globe Tavern, now a private home, was declared a national monument last March.

Another national monument in Barberton is the facade of one of the first stock exchange buildings in South Africa. The old building on Pilgrim Street is a reminder of the time when the region was the scene of feverish activity.

In 1873 alluvial gold was discovered at Spitskop, Mac Mac and Pilgrim's Rest. By 1882 these deposits were largely exhausted and prospectors and diggers began to search for new sources of gold farther afield. Some of them went into the Kaap Valley which then was so infested with malaria it was known as the Valley of Death. But this didn't keep the fortune-hunters out. One of them, Graham Hoare Barber discovered a rich gold-bearing reef on the eastern side of the valley in 1884. This attracted great numbers of diggers and the resulting settlement was called Barberton.

The town grew rapidly until its population reached about 20,000. Business undertakings flourished, including six hotels and four banks, and there was lively trading in shares. On Nov. 23, 1886 the first stock exchange in the Transvaal (and the second in South Africa) was established. It was called the Kaap Gold Fields Stock Exchange Limited and in April, 1887, it moved into an elegant new building of which only the walls still stand today.

With the discovery of the great Witwatersrand goldfield, the importance of Barberton dwindled. Business, including stock exchange activity, shifted to Johannesburg.

The rear portion of the old Kaap exchange was demolished in 1958 but the front portion was retained and restored by the municipality of Barberton. The commemorative bronze plaque adorning it was a gift from the Johannesburg Stock Exchange.

The NZASM Tunnel near Waterval Boven in the eastern Transvaal is another unusual national monument. It was built in 1892-93 for the old Transvaal Republic as part of the Dutch South African Railway Company's line from Lourenco Marques (now Maputo) to Pretoria and it is a curved tunnel, about 400 meters long. When the railway line was subsequently diverted over a longer route, the old tunnel was used for road traffic — until 1936. It is now a "museum piece" and sections of the old cog-railway have been preserved inside the tunnel.
